(3) popcorn must be of high quality, readily available, handled properly, and marketed efficiently to ensure that the benefits of popcorn are available to the people of the United States;

Subtitle D—Commodity Promotion and Evaluation

SEC. 961. COMMODITY PROMOTION AND EVALUATION.

(a) Findings.—Congress finds that—

(1) it is in the national public interest and vital to the welfare of the agricultural economy of the United States to expand and develop markets for agricultural commodities through generic, industry-funded promotion programs;

(2) the programs play a unique role in advancing the demand for agricultural commodities, since the programs increase the total market for a product to the benefit of consumers and all producers;

(3) the programs complement branded advertising initiatives, which are aimed at increasing the market share of individual competitors;

(4) the programs are of particular benefit to small producers, who may lack the resources or market power to advertise on their own;

(5) the programs do not impede the branded advertising efforts of individual firms but instead increase market demand by methods that each individual entity would not have the incentive to employ;

(6) the programs, paid for by the producers who directly reap the benefits of the programs, provide a unique opportunity for agricultural producers to inform consumers about their products;

(7) it is important to ensure that the programs be carried out in an effective and coordinated manner that is designed to strengthen the position of the commodities in the marketplace and to maintain and expand the markets and uses of the commodities; and

(8) independent evaluation of the effectiveness of the programs will assist Congress and the Secretary of Agriculture in ensuring that the objectives of the programs are met.

(b) Independent Evaluations.—Except as otherwise provided by law, and at such intervals as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine, but not more frequently than every 3 years or 3 years after the establishment of a program, the Secretary shall require that each industry-funded generic promotion program authorized by Federal law for an agricultural commodity shall provide for an independent evaluation of the program and the effectiveness of the program. The evaluation may include an analysis of benefits, costs, and the efficacy of promotional and research efforts under the program. The evaluation shall be funded from industry assessments and made available to the public.

(c) Administrative Costs.—The Secretary shall provide to Congress annually information on administrative expenses on programs referred to in subsection (b).

(3) AREA MARKETING ASSOCIATIONS.—

(A) WAREHOUSE STORAGE LOANS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out paragraphs (1) and (2), the Secretary shall make warehouse storage loans available in each of the 3 producing areas described in section 1446.95 of title 7, Code of Federal Regulations (as of January 1, 1989), to a designated area marketing association of peanut producers that is selected and approved by the Secretary and that is operated primarily for the purpose of conducting the loan activities. The Secretary may not make warehouse storage loans available to any cooperative that is engaged in operations or activities concerning peanuts other than those operations and activities specified in this subsection and sections 358e of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (7 U.S.C. 1359a).

(ii) ADMINISTRATIVE AND SUPERVISORY ACTIVITIES.—The area marketing associations shall be used in administrative and supervisory activities relating to price support and marketing activities under this subsection and sections 358e of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

(iii) ASSOCIATION COSTS.—Loans made to an area marketing association under this subparagraph shall include, in addition to the price support value of the peanuts, such costs as the association reasonably may incur in carrying out the responsibilities, operations, and activities of the association under this subsection and sections 358e of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

(B) POOLS FOR QUOTA AND ADDITIONAL PEANUTS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall require that each area marketing association establish pools and maintain complete and accurate records by area and segregation for quota peanuts handled under loan and for additional peanuts placed under loan, except that separate pools shall be established for Valencia peanuts produced in New Mexico. Peanuts produced outside New Mexico shall not be eligible for entry into or participation in the separate pools established for Valencia peanuts produced in New Mexico. Bright hull and dark hull Valencia peanuts shall be considered as separate types for the purpose of establishing the pools.

(ii) NET GAINS.—Net gains on peanuts in each pool, unless otherwise approved by the Secretary, shall be distributed only to producers who placed peanuts in the pool and shall be distributed in proportion to the value of the peanuts placed in the pool by each producer. Net gains for peanuts in each pool shall consist of the following:

(I) QUOTA PEANUTS.—For quota peanuts, the net gains over and above the loan indebtedness and other costs or losses incurred on peanuts placed in the pool plus an amount from all additional pool gains equal to any loss on disposition of all peanuts in the pool for quota peanuts.

(II) ADDITIONAL PEANUTS.—For additional peanuts, the net gains over and above the loan indebtedness and other costs or losses incurred on peanuts placed in the pool for additional peanuts less any amount allocated to offset any loss on the pool for quota peanuts as provided in subclause (I).

(4) LOSSES.—Losses in quota area pools shall be covered using the following sources in the following order of priority:

(A) TRANSFERS FROM ADDITIONAL LOAN POOLS.—The proceeds due any producer from any pool shall be reduced by the amount of any loss that is incurred with respect to peanuts transferred from an additional loan pool to a quota loan pool by the producer under section 358–1(b)(2)(B)(v) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (as amended by subsection (c)).

(B) OTHER PRODUCERS IN SAME POOL.—Further losses in an area quota pool shall be offset by reducing the gain of any producer in the pool by the amount of pool gains attributed to the same producer from the sale of additional peanuts for domestic and export edible use.

(C) ADDITIONAL PEANUT GAINS.—Further losses in an area quota pool shall be offset by gains or profits attributable to sales of additional peanuts in that area for domestic edible and other uses.

(D) USE OF MARKETING ASSESSMENTS.—The Secretary shall use funds collected under paragraph (7) to offset further losses in area quota pools. The Secretary shall transfer to the Treasury those funds collected under paragraph (7) and available for use under this subsection that the Secretary determines are not required to cover losses in area quota pools.

(E) CROSS COMPLIANCE.—Further losses in area quota pools, other than losses incurred as a result of transfers from additional loan pools to quota loan pools under section 358–1(b)(2)(B)(v) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (as amended by subsection (c)), shall be offset by any gains or profits from pools in other production areas (other than separate type pools established under paragraph (3)(B)(i) for Valencia peanuts produced in New Mexico) in such manner as the Secretary shall by regulation prescribe.

(F) INCREASED ASSESSMENTS.—If use of the authorities provided in the preceding paragraphs is not sufficient to cover losses in an area quota pool, the Secretary shall increase the marketing assessment established under paragraph (7) by such an amount as the Secretary considers necessary to cover the losses. Amounts collected under paragraph (7) as a result of the increased assessment shall be retained by the Secretary to cover losses in that pool.

(5) DISAPPROVAL OF QUOTAS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no price support may be made available by the Secretary for any crop of peanuts with respect to which poundage quotas have been disapproved by producers, as provided for in section 358–1(d) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (as amended by subsection (c)).

(6) QUALITY IMPROVEMENT.—

(A) PRICE SUPPORT PEANUTS.—With respect to peanuts under price support loan, the Secretary shall—

(i) promote the crushing of peanuts at a greater risk of deterioration before peanuts at a lesser risk of deterioration;

(ii) ensure that all Commodity Credit Corporation loan stocks of peanuts sold for domestic edible use are shown to have been officially inspected by licensed Department of Agriculture inspectors both as farmer stock and shelled or cleaned in-shell peanuts;

(iii) continue to endeavor to operate the peanut price support program so as to improve the quality of domestic peanuts and ensure the coordination of activities under the Peanut Administrative Committee established under Marketing Agreement No. 146, regulating the quality of domestically produced peanuts (under the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 601 et seq.), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937); and

(iv) ensure that any changes made in the price support program as a result of this paragraph requiring additional production or handling at the farm level are reflected as an upward adjustment in the Department of Agriculture loan schedule.

(B) EXPORTS AND OTHER PEANUTS.—The Secretary shall require that all peanuts, including peanuts imported into the United States, meet all United States quality standards under Marketing Agreement No. 146 and that importers of the peanuts fully comply with inspection, handling, storage, and processing requirements implemented under Marketing Agreement No. 146. The Secretary shall ensure that peanuts produced for the export market meet quality, inspection, handling, storage, and processing requirements under Marketing Agreement No. 146.

(7) MARKETING ASSESSMENT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide, by regulation, for a nonrefundable marketing assessment applicable to each of the 1996 through 2002 crops of peanuts. The assessment shall be made in accordance with this paragraph and shall be on a per pound basis in an amount equal to 1.2 percent of the national average quota or additional peanut support rate per pound, as applicable, for the applicable crop. No peanuts shall be assessed more than 1.2 percent of the applicable support rate under this paragraph.

(B) FIRST PURCHASERS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided under subparagraphs (C) and (D), the first purchaser of peanuts shall—

(I) collect from the producer a marketing assessment equal to the quantity of peanuts acquired multiplied by .65 percent of the applicable national average support rate;

(II) pay, in addition to the amount collected under subclause (I), a marketing assessment in an amount equal to the quantity of peanuts acquired multiplied by .55 percent of the applicable national average support rate; and

(III) remit the amounts required under subclauses (I) and (II) to the Commodity Credit Corporation in a manner specified by the Secretary.

(ii) IMPORTED PEANUTS.—In the case of imported peanuts, the first purchaser shall pay to the Commodity Credit Corporation, in a manner specified by the Secretary, a marketing assessment in an amount equal to the quantity of peanuts acquired multiplied by 1.2 percent of the national average support rate for additional peanuts.

(iii) DEFINITION.—In this paragraph, the term 'first purchaser' means a person acquiring peanuts from a producer, except that in the case of peanuts forfeited by a producer to the Commodity Credit Corporation, the term means the person acquiring the peanuts from the Commodity Credit Corporation.

(C) OTHER PRIVATE MARKETINGS.—In the case of a private marketing by a producer directly to a consumer through a retail or wholesale outlet or in the case of a marketing by the producer outside of the continental United States, the producer shall be responsible for the full amount of the assessment and shall remit the assessment by such time as is specified by the Secretary.

(D) LOAN PEANUTS.—In the case of peanuts that are pledged as collateral for a price support loan made under this subsection, ½ of the assessment shall be deducted from the proceeds of the loan. The remainder of the assessment shall be paid by the first purchaser of the peanuts. For the purposes of computing net gains on peanuts under this subsection, the reduction in loan proceeds shall be treated as having been paid to the producer.

(E) PENALTIES.—If any person fails to collect or remit the reduction required by this paragraph or fails to comply with such requirements for recordkeeping or otherwise as are required by the Secretary to carry out this paragraph, the person shall be liable to the Secretary for a civil penalty up to an amount determined by multiplying—

(i) the quantity of peanuts involved in the violation; by

(ii) the national average quota peanut price support level for the applicable crop year.

(F) ENFORCEMENT.—The Secretary may enforce this paragraph in the courts of the United States.

(8) CROPS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, this subsection shall be effective only for the 1996 through 2002 crops of peanuts.

(b) SUSPENSION OF MARKETING QUOTAS AND ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS.—Section 371 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (7 U.S.C. 1371) shall not be applicable to the 1996 through 2002 crops of peanuts.

"SEC. 358–1. NATIONAL POUNDAGE QUOTAS AND ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS FOR 1996 THROUGH 2002 CROPS OF PEANUTS.

"(a) NATIONAL POUNDAGE QUOTAS.—

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The national poundage quota for peanuts for each of the 1996 through 2002 marketing years shall be established by the Secretary at a level that is equal to the quantity of peanuts (in tons) that the Secretary estimates will be devoted in each such marketing year to domestic edible and related uses, excluding seed. The Secretary shall include in the annual estimate of domestic edible and related uses, the estimated quantity of peanuts and peanut products to be imported into the United States for the marketing year for which the quota is being established.

"(2) ANNOUNCEMENT.—The national poundage quota for a marketing year shall be announced by the Secretary not later than the December 15 preceding the marketing year.

"(3) APPORTIONMENT AMONG STATES.—The national poundage quota established under paragraph (1) shall be apportioned among the States so that the poundage quota allocated to each State is equal to the percentage of the national poundage quota allocated to farms in the State for 1995.

"(b) FARM POUNDAGE QUOTAS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—

"(A) ESTABLISHMENT.—A farm poundage quota for each of the 1996 through 2002 marketing years shall be established—

"(i) for each farm that had a farm poundage quota for peanuts for the 1995 marketing year;

"(ii) if the poundage quota apportioned to a State under subsection (a)(3) for any such marketing year is larger than the quota for the immediately preceding marketing year, for each other farm on which peanuts were produced for marketing in at least 2 of the 3 immediately preceding crop years, as determined by the Secretary; and

"(iii) as approved and determined by the Secretary under section 358c, for each farm on which peanuts are produced in connection with experimental and research programs.

"(B) QUANTITY.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The farm poundage quota for each of the 1996 through 2002 marketing years for each farm described in subparagraph (A)(i) shall be the same as the farm poundage quota for the farm for the immediately preceding marketing year, as adjusted under paragraph (2), but not including any increases resulting from the allocation of quotas voluntarily released for 1 year under paragraph (7).

"(ii) INCREASED QUOTA.—The farm poundage quota, if any, for each of the 1996 through 2002 marketing years for each farm described in subparagraph (A)(ii) shall be equal to the quantity of peanuts allocated to the farm for the year under paragraph (2).

"(C) TRANSFERS.—For purposes of this subsection, if the farm poundage quota, or any part of the quota, is permanently transferred in accordance with section 358b, the receiving farm shall be considered as possessing the farm poundage quota (or portion of the quota) of the transferring farm for all subsequent marketing years.

"(2) ADJUSTMENTS.—

"(A) ALLOCATION OF INCREASED QUOTA GENERALLY.—Subject to subparagraphs (B) and (D), if the poundage quota apportioned to a State under subsection (a)(3) for any of the 1996 through 2002 marketing years is increased over the poundage quota apportioned to farms in the State for the immediately preceding marketing year, the increase shall be allocated proportionately, based on farm production history for peanuts for the 3 immediately preceding years, among—

"(i) all farms in the State for which a farm poundage quota was established for the marketing year immediately preceding the marketing year for which the allocation is being made; and

"(ii) all other farms in the State on which peanuts were produced in at least 2 of the 3 immediately preceding crop years, as determined by the Secretary.

"(B) TEMPORARY QUOTA ALLOCATION.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Subject to clause (iv), temporary allocation of a poundage quota for the marketing year in which a crop of peanuts is planted shall be made to producers for each of the 1996 through 2002 marketing years in accordance with this subparagraph.

"(ii) QUANTITY.—The temporary quota allocation shall be equal to the quantity of seed peanuts (in pounds) planted on a farm, as determined in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary.

"(iii) ALLOCATION.—The allocation of quota pounds to producers under this subparagraph shall be performed in such a manner as will not result in a net decrease in quota pounds on a farm in excess of 3 percent, after the temporary seed quota is added, from the basic farm quota for the 1995 marketing year. A decrease shall occur only once, shall be applicable only to the 1996 marketing year.

"(iv) NO INCREASED COSTS.—The Secretary may carry out this subparagraph only if this subparagraph does not result in—

"(I) an increased cost to the Commodity Credit Corporation through displacement of quota peanuts by additional peanuts in the domestic market;

"(II) an increased loss in a loan pool of an area marketing association designated pursuant to section 106(a)(3)(A) of the Agricultural Market Transition Act; or

"(III) other increased costs.

"(v) TRANSFER OF ADDITIONAL PEANUTS.—

"(I) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subclause (II), additional peanuts on a farm from which the quota poundage was not harvested and marketed may be transferred to the quota loan pool for pricing purposes on such basis as the Secretary shall provide by regulation.

"(II) LIMITATIONS.—The poundage of peanuts transferred under subclause (I) shall not exceed 25 percent of the total farm poundage quota, excluding pounds transferred in the fall.

"(III) SUPPORT RATE.—Peanuts transferred under this clause shall be supported at a rate of 70 percent of the quota support rate for the marketing years during which the transfers occur.

"(vi) USE OF QUOTA AND ADDITIONAL PEANUTS.—Nothing in this subparagraph affects the requirements of section 358b(b).

"(vii) ADDITIONAL ALLOCATION.—The temporary allocation of quota pounds under this subparagraph shall be in addition to the farm poundage quota established under this subsection and shall be credited to the producers of the peanuts on the farm in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary.

"(C) DECREASE.—If the poundage quota apportioned to a State under subsection (a)(3) for any of the 1996 through 2002 marketing years is decreased from the poundage quota apportioned to farms in the State under subsection (a)(3) for the immediately preceding marketing year, the decrease shall be allocated among all the farms in the State for which a farm poundage quota was established for the marketing year immediately preceding the marketing year for which the allocation is being made.

"(D) SPECIAL RULE ON TENANT'S SHARE OF INCREASED QUOTA.—Subject to terms and conditions prescribed by the Secretary, on farms that were leased to a tenant for peanut production, the tenant shall share equally with the owner of the farm in the percentage of the quota made available under subparagraph (A) and otherwise allocated to the farm as the result of the production of the tenant on the farm of additional peanuts. Not later than April 1 of each year or as soon as practicable during the year, the share of the tenant of any such quota shall be allocated to a farm within the county owned by the tenant or sold by the tenant to the owner of any farm within the county and permanently transferred to the farm. Any quota not so disposed of as provided in this subparagraph shall be allocated to other quota farms in the State under paragraph (6) as part of the quota reduced from farms in the State due to the failure to produce the quota.

"(3) QUOTA NOT PRODUCED.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Insofar as practicable and on such fair and equitable basis as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe, the farm poundage quota established for a farm for any of the 1996 through 2002 marketing years shall be reduced to the extent that the Secretary determines that the farm poundage quota established for the farm for any 2 of the 3 marketing years preceding the marketing year for which the determination is being made was not produced, or considered produced, on the farm.

"(B) EXCLUSIONS.—For the purposes of this paragraph, the farm poundage quota for any such preceding marketing year shall not include any increase resulting from the allocation of quotas voluntarily released for 1 year under paragraph (7).

"(4) QUOTA CONSIDERED PRODUCED.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this subsection, subject to subparagraph (B), the farm poundage quota shall be considered produced on a farm if—

"(i) the farm poundage quota was not produced on the farm because of drought, flood, or any other natural disaster, or any other condition beyond the control of the producer, as determined by the Secretary;

"(ii) the farm poundage quota for the farm was released voluntarily under paragraph (7) for only 1 of the 3 marketing years immediately preceding the marketing year for which the determination is being made; or

"(iii) the farm poundage quota was leased to another owner or operator of a farm within the same county for transfer to the farm for only 1 of the 3 marketing years immediately preceding the marketing year for which the determination is being made.

"(B) MARKETING YEARS.—For purposes of clauses (ii) and (iii) of subparagraph (A)—

"(i) the farm poundage quota leased or transferred shall be considered produced for only 1 of the 3 marketing years immediately preceding the marketing year for which the determination is being made; and

"(ii) the farm shall not be considered to have produced for more than 1 marketing year out of the 3 immediately preceding marketing years.

"(5) QUOTA PERMANENTLY RELEASED.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

"(A) the farm poundage quota established for a farm under this subsection, or any part of the quota, may be permanently released by the owner of the farm, or the operator with the permission of the owner; and

"(B) the poundage quota for the farm for which the quota is released shall be adjusted downward to reflect the quota that is released.

"(6) ALLOCATION OF QUOTAS REDUCED OR RELEASED.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the total quantity of the farm poundage quotas reduced or voluntarily released from farms in a State for any marketing year under paragraphs (3) and (5) shall be allocated, as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe, to other farms in the State on which peanuts were produced in at least 2 of the 3 crop years immediately preceding the year for which the allocation is being made.

"(B) SET-ASIDE FOR FARMS WITH NO QUOTA.—The total amount of farm poundage quota to be allocated in the State under subparagraph (A) shall be allocated to farms in the State for which no farm poundage quota was established for the crop of the immediately preceding year. The allocation to any such farm shall not exceed the average farm production of peanuts for the 3 immediately preceding years during which peanuts were produced on the farm. Any farm poundage quota remaining after allocation to farms under this subparagraph shall be allocated to farms in the State on which poundage quotas were established for the crop of the immediately preceding year.

"(7) QUOTA TEMPORARILY RELEASED.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The farm poundage quota, or any portion of the quota, established for a farm for a marketing year may be voluntarily released to the Secretary to the extent that the quota, or any part of the quota, will not be produced on the farm for the marketing year. Any farm poundage quota so released in a State shall be allocated to other farms in the State on such basis as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

"(B) EFFECTIVE PERIOD.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, any adjustment in the farm poundage quota for a farm under subparagraph (A) shall be effective only for the marketing year for which the adjustment is made and shall not be taken into consideration in establishing a farm poundage quota for the farm from which the quota was released for any subsequent marketing year.

"(c) FARM YIELDS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For each farm for which a farm poundage quota is established under subsection (b), and when necessary for purposes of this Act, a farm yield of peanuts shall be determined for each such farm.

"(2) QUANTITY.—The yield shall be equal to the average of the actual yield per acre on the farm for each of the 3 crop years in which yields were highest on the farm during the 5-year period consisting of the 1973 through 1977 crop years.

"(3) APPRAISED YIELDS.—If peanuts were not produced on the farm in at least 3 years during the 5-year period or there was a substantial change in the operation of the farm during the period (including a change in operator, lessee who is an operator, or irrigation practices), the Secretary shall have a yield appraised for the farm. The appraised yield shall be that quantity determined to be fair and reasonable on the basis of yields established for similar farms that are located in the area of the farm and on which peanuts were produced, taking into consideration land, labor, and equipment available for the production of peanuts, crop rotation practices, soil and water, and other relevant factors.

"(d) REFERENDUM RESPECTING POUNDAGE QUOTAS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than December 15 of each calendar year, the Secretary shall conduct a referendum of producers engaged in the production of quota peanuts in the calendar year in which the referendum is held to determine whether the producers are in favor of or opposed to poundage quotas with respect to the crops of peanuts produced in the 5 calendar years immediately following the year in which the referendum is held, except that, if at least ⅔ of the producers voting in any referendum vote in favor of poundage quotas, no referendum shall be held with respect to quotas for the remaining years of the 5-calendar-year period.

"(2) PROCLAMATION.—The Secretary shall proclaim the result of the referendum within 30 days after the date on which the referendum is held.

"(3) VOTE AGAINST QUOTAS.—If more than ⅓ of the producers voting in the referendum vote against poundage quotas, the Secretary shall proclaim that poundage quotas will not be in effect with respect to the crop of peanuts produced in the calendar year immediately following the calendar year in which the referendum is held.

"(e) DEFINITIONS.—In this part and the Agricultural Market Transition Act:

"(1) ADDITIONAL PEANUTS.—The term 'additional peanuts' means, for any marketing year—

"(A) any peanuts that are marketed from a farm for which a farm poundage quota has been established and that are in excess of the marketings of quota peanuts from the farm for the year; and

"(B) all peanuts marketed from a farm for which no farm poundage quota has been established in accordance with subsection (b).

"(2) CRUSH.—The term 'crush' means the processing of peanuts to extract oil for food uses and meal for feed uses, or the processing of peanuts by crushing or otherwise when authorized by the Secretary.

"(3) DOMESTIC EDIBLE USE.—The term 'domestic edible use' means use for milling to produce domestic food peanuts (other than a use described in paragraph (2)) and seed and use on a farm, except that the Secretary may exempt from this paragraph seeds of peanuts that are used to produce peanuts excluded under section 301(b)(18), are unique strains, and are not commercially available.

"(4) QUOTA PEANUTS.—The term 'quota peanuts' means, for any marketing year, any peanuts produced on a farm having a farm poundage quota, as determined under subsection (b), that—

"(A) are eligible for domestic edible use as determined by the Secretary;

"(B) are marketed or considered marketed from a farm; and

"(C) do not exceed the farm poundage quota of the farm for the year.

"(f) CROPS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, this section shall be effective only for the 1996 through 2002 crops of peanuts.".

(d) SALE, LEASE, OR TRANSFER OF FARM POUNDAGE QUOTA.—Section 358b of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (7 U.S.C. 1358b) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 358b. SALE, LEASE, OR TRANSFER OF FARM POUNDAGE QUOTA FOR 1996 THROUGH 2000 CROPS OF PEANUTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) AUTHORITY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to such terms, conditions, or limitations as the Secretary may prescribe, the owner, or operator with the permission of the owner, of any farm for which a farm poundage quota has been established under this Act may sell or lease all or any part of the poundage quota to any other owner or operator of a farm within the same county for transfer to the farm, except that any such lease of poundage quota may be entered into in the fall or after the normal planting season—

"(i) if not less than 90 percent of the basic quota (consisting of the farm quota and temporary quota transfers), plus any poundage quota transferred to the farm under this subsection, has been planted or considered planted on the farm from which the quota is to be leased; and

"(ii) under such terms and conditions as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

"(B) FALL TRANSFERS.—

"(i) NO TRANSFER AUTHORIZATION.—In the case of a fall transfer or a transfer after the normal planting season by a cash lessee, the landowner shall not be required to sign the transfer authorization.

"(ii) TIME LIMITATION.—A fall transfer or a transfer after the normal planting season may be made not later than 72 hours after the peanuts that are the subject of the transfer are inspected and graded.

"(iii) LESSEES.—In the case of a fall transfer, poundage quota from a farm may be leased to an owner or operator of another farm within the same county or to an owner or operator of another farm in any other county within the State.

"(iv) EFFECT OF TRANSFER.—A fall transfer of poundage quota shall not affect the farm quota history for the transferring or receiving farm and shall not result in the reduction of the farm poundage quota on the transferring farm.

"(2) TRANSFERS TO OTHER SELF-OWNED FARMS.—The owner or operator of a farm may transfer all or any part of the farm poundage quota for the farm to any other farm owned or controlled by the owner or operator that is in the same State and that had a farm poundage quota for the crop of the preceding year, if both the transferring and receiving farms were under the control of the owner or operator for at least 3 crop years prior to the crop year in which the farm poundage quota is to be transferred. Any farm poundage quota transferred under this paragraph shall not result in any reduction in the farm poundage quota for the transferring farm if sufficient acreage is planted on the receiving farm to produce the quota pounds transferred.

"(3) TRANSFERS WITHIN STATES WITH SMALL QUOTAS.—In the case of any State for which the poundage quota allocated to the State was less than 10,000 tons for the crop of the preceding year, all or any part of a farm poundage quota may be transferred by sale or lease or otherwise from a farm in 1 county to a farm in another county in the same State.

"(4) TRANSFERS BETWEEN STATES HAVING QUOTAS OF LESS THAN 10,000 TONS.—Notwithstanding paragraphs (1) through (3), in the case of any State for which the poundage quota allocated to the State was less than 10,000 tons for the crop of the preceding year, all or any part of a farm poundage quota up to 1,000 tons may be transferred by sale or lease from a farm in 1 such State to a farm in another such State.

"(5) TRANSFERS BY SALE IN STATES HAVING QUOTAS OF 10,000 TONS OR MORE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the other provisions of this paragraph and such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe, the owner, or operator with the permission of the owner, of any farm for which a farm quota has been established under this Act in a State having a poundage quota of 10,000 tons or more may sell poundage quota to any other eligible owner or operator of a farm within the same State.

"(B) LIMITATIONS BASED ON TOTAL POUNDAGE QUOTA.—

"(i) 1996 MARKETING YEAR.—Not more than 15 percent of the total poundage quota within a county as of January 1, 1996, may be sold and transferred under this paragraph during the 1996 marketing year.

"(ii) 1997–2002 MARKETING YEARS.—

"(I) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subclause (II), not more than 5 percent of the quota pounds remaining in a county as of January 1, 1997, and each January 1 thereafter through January 1, 2002, may be sold and transferred under this paragraph during the applicable marketing year.

"(II) CARRYOVER.—Any eligible quota that is not sold or transferred under clause (i) shall be eligible for sale or transfer under subclause (I).

"(C) COUNTY LIMITATION.—Not more than 40 percent of the total poundage quota within a county may be sold and transferred under this paragraph.

"(D) SUBSEQUENT LEASES OR SALES.—Quota pounds sold and transferred to a farm under this paragraph may not be leased or sold by the farm to another owner or operator of a farm within the same State for a period of 5 years following the date of the original transfer to the farm.

"(E) APPLICATION.—This paragraph shall not apply to a sale within the same county or to any sale, lease, or transfer described in paragraph (1).

"(b) CONDITIONS.—Transfers (including transfer by sale or lease) of farm poundage quotas under this section shall be subject to all of the following conditions:

"(1) LIENHOLDERS.—No transfer of the farm poundage quota from a farm subject to a mortgage or other lien shall be permitted unless the transfer is agreed to by the lienholders.

"(2) TILLABLE CROPLAND.—No transfer of the farm poundage quota shall be permitted if the county committee established under section 8(b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act (16 U.S.C. 590h(b)) determines that the receiving farm does not have adequate tillable cropland to produce the farm poundage quota.

"(3) RECORD.—No transfer of the farm poundage quota shall be effective until a record of the transfer is filed with the county committee of each county to, and from, which the transfer is made and each committee determines that the transfer complies with this section.

"(4) OTHER TERMS.—The Secretary may establish by regulation other terms and conditions.

"(c) CROPS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, this section shall be effective only for the 1996 through 2000 crops of peanuts.".

(e) MARKETING PENALTIES; DISPOSITION OF ADDITIONAL PEANUTS.—Section 358e of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (7 U.S.C. 1359a) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 358e. MARKETING PENALTIES AND DISPOSITION OF ADDITIONAL PEANUTS FOR 1996 THROUGH 2002 CROPS OF PEANUTS.

"(a) MARKETING PENALTIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—

"(A) MARKETING PEANUTS IN EXCESS OF QUOTA.—The marketing of any peanuts for domestic edible use in excess of the farm poundage quota for the farm on which the peanuts are produced shall be subject to a penalty at a rate equal to 140 percent of the support price for quota peanuts for the marketing year in which the marketing occurs. The penalty shall not apply to the marketing of breeder or Foundation seed peanuts grown and marketed by a publicly owned agricultural experiment station (including a State operated seed organization) under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(B) MARKETING YEAR.—For purposes of this section, the marketing year for peanuts shall be the 12-month period beginning August 1 and ending July 31.

"(C) MARKETING ADDITIONAL PEANUTS.—The marketing of any additional peanuts from a farm shall be subject to the same penalty as the penalty prescribed in subparagraph (A) unless the peanuts, in accordance with regulations established by the Secretary, are—

"(i) placed under loan at the additional loan rate in effect for the peanuts under section 106 of the Agricultural Market Transition Act and not redeemed by the producers;

"(ii) marketed through an area marketing association designated pursuant to section 106(a)(3)(A) of the Agricultural Market Transition Act; or

"(iii) marketed under contracts between handlers and producers pursuant to subsection (f).

"(2) PAYER.—The penalty shall be paid by the person who buys or otherwise acquires the peanuts from the producer or, if the peanuts are marketed by the producer through an agent, the penalty shall be paid by the agent. The person or agent may deduct an amount equivalent to the penalty from the price paid to the producer.

"(3) FAILURE TO COLLECT.—If the person required to collect the penalty fails to collect the penalty, the person and all persons entitled to share in the peanuts marketed from the farm or the proceeds of the marketing shall be jointly and severally liable with the persons who failed to collect the penalty for the amount of the penalty.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

COMMERCIAL REVITALIZATION TAX CREDIT OF 1995

• Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I strongly support S. 743, the Commercial Revitalization Tax Credit Act of 1995 [CRTC] and today I join several of my colleagues in cosponsoring this bill. I commend Senator KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON for her sponsorship of this legislation designed to encourage business investment in economically distressed areas. I also want to commend my Pennsylvania colleague, Representative PHIL ENGLISH who has introduced this same legislation in the House. I believe this measure will help to create jobs and expand economic activity, in addition to improving the physical appearance and property values in these areas.

Earlier in this session, I introduced legislation to replace our current cumbersome Tax Code with a simple and efficient 20-percent flat tax. My legislation, the Flat Tax Act of 1995 (S. 488) will bring tremendous economic growth to all areas of our country, and especially our cities by freeing up capital and lowering interest rates. While I continue to support the principles and necessity of a flat tax, I believe that in the interim we must proceed with measures such as the Commercial Revitalization Tax Credit Act to bring economic growth to our cities immediately.

This legislation provides a targeted, limited tax credit to businesses to help defray their costs of construction, expansion, and renovation in urban areas. The CRTC would be another tool to aid localities and States in boosting jobs and business investment in America's most troubled neighborhoods. If enacted, estimates indicate the CRTC could attract over $7 billion in private sector investment to these communities, create thousands of jobs, and generate new tax revenue.

America's urban areas serve an important role as centers of commerce, industry, education, health care, and culture. Yet these urban centers, particularly in the inner cities, also have special needs. As a Philadelphia resident, I have first-hand knowledge of the growing problems that plague our cities. I have long supported a variety of programs to assist our cities such as increased funding for community development block grants, extension of the low income housing tax credit, and legislation to establish enterprise and empowerment zones. I have also promoted legislation to provide targeted tax incentives for investing in minority- or women-owned small businesses.

This issue of urban renewal is not new to me. In the 104th Congress, I introduced the New Urban Agenda Act of 1995—S. 17—which would redress urban decay and decline without massive Federal outlays. S. 17 embodies many of the proposals of Philadelphia Mayor Edward G. Rendell. The bill is intended to stimulate the economies of our urban centers. Increased economic growth resulting in increased employment is the key to reversing current urban economic conditions. Specifically, my legislation would: First, require certain Federal and foreign aid purchases to be made from businesses operating with urban zones; second, favor distressed cities for the location or relocation of Federal facilities; third, expand the historic rehabilitation tax credit, expand the use of commercial industrial development bonds, and modify the arbitrage rebate rules concerning municipal bond interest; fourth, study streamlining Federal housing programs into block-grant form, and encourage community building by locating original tenants in new units on old sites; and fifth, ease environmental restrictions for governments, speed up the remediation process, and establish a pilot powerplant for the benefit of city residents and energy intensive industry.

Mr. President, I believe the CRTC will complement my legislation because it would encourage new construction and rehabilitation of structures in distressed areas. The CRTC would provide businesses with the option of taking either a one time 20-percent tax credit against the cost of new construction or rehabilitation, or a tax credit of 5 percent a year for 10 years. The credit is intended to help encourage businesses locate to economically distressed areas.

The original concept of enterprise zones provided for broad based incentives for capital formation. Current these zones primarily encourage wage-based tax, and other investment incentives to locate within the zone. There is no incentive for a business within the zone to expand so that larger numbers of employees can be hired. That is a gap which the CRTC fills.

I believe the CRTC will be an efficient and productive program. The tax credit will only be available after private sector investment has been made and the competed project is generating income. This bill authorizes a maximum of $1.5 billion in tax credits over a 5-year period. The credits will be allocated to each State according to a formula which takes into account the number of localities where over half the people earn less than 60 percent of the area's median income. Local governments, not the Federal Government, will determine their priority projects and forward them to the States which will allocate the tax credits according to an evaluation system which the States themselves establish.

Furthrmore, communities which have already been designated as economic revitalization areas by the Federal, State, and local governments would now become eligible for the CRTC Program. This is particularly good news for Philadelphia, PA, and Camden, NJ, which were jointly chosen as 1 of 6 urban empowerment zones by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The cities of Harrisburg and Pittsburgh, and Allegheny County in my home State were also designated as enterprise communities and will benefit from S. 743.

Last June, the U.S. Conference of Mayors adopted the attached resolution sponsored by Edward Rendell, the mayor of Philadelphia, which endorsed the commercial revitalization tax credit. Other organizations which have endorsed this bill include the National Association of Counties, the American Institute of Architects, the National Association of Industrial Office Properties, the American Planning Association, the American Enterprise Zone Association, the Local Initiatives Support Corporation, the International Downtown Association, the National Congress of Community Economic Development, and the American Society of Landscape Architects.

We must address any very serious issues—jobs, teenage pregnancy, welfare reform—if we are to save our cities. It may well be that many in America have given up on our cities. That is a stark statement, but it is one which I believe may be true, but, I have not given up. And I believe there are others in this body on both sides of the aisle who have not done so. There must be new strategies for dealing with the problems of urban America. The Commercial Tax Revitalization Tax Credit Act is one such strategy that strives toward the ultimate goal of restoring the former vitality of our cities which can only help make our country stronger and more competitive. The days of expansive Federal aid are clearly past, but that is no excuse for the National Government to turn a blind eye to the problems of the cities.

The resolution follows:

RESOLUTION NO. 62—COMMERCIAL REVITALIZATION TAX CREDIT

Whereas, many American urban centers and rural areas are plagued by chronic economic distress, including aging infrastructure and business disinvestment; and

Whereas, to be successful in breaking the cycle of economic erosion, unemployment and abandonment of older neighborhoods, new measures must be taken to regenerate private investment; and

Whereas, new approaches must be fostered to address the problems of our cities; and

Whereas, Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison (TX) has introduced the Commercial Revitalization Tax Credit Act (CRTCA) of 1995 to encourage business investment and reinvestment in specially designated revitalization areas; and

Whereas, the CRTCA would offer a 20 percent tax credit in one year, or a 5 percent credit each year for 10 years, to defray the cost of business construction, expansion or rehabilitation in specially designated areas; and

Whereas, tax policies designed to target private entrepreneurial activities in declining urban and rural areas enjoy bipartisan support, Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That The United States Conference of Mayors strongly urges Congress to support this session the CRTCA; and be it further

Resolved, That The United States Conference of Mayors urges Congress to approve this credit this session at the full benefit level for which it is proposed.•

DIETRICH BONHOEFFER

• Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I rise today to bring attention to the life of one of the 20th-century's most inspirational leaders, the anti-Nazi theologian, Dietrich Bonhoeffer. The author of numerous books, most notably, "The Cost of Discipleship" and "Letter and Papers From Prison," Mr. Bonhoeffer spent time in the United States as a student at Union Seminary in New York.

It was after his stay in the United States that Dietrich Bonhoeffer returned to his native Germany and voiced opposition to the practices of Hitler and his Nazi regime. As an ardent pacifist, not only did he speak out against Nazi terrors and propaganda, but Mr. Bonhoeffer was centrally involved in transporting Jews from Germany to Switzerland in an effort to spare them from the Nazis.

In 1943 Mr. Bonhoeffer was arrested and sent to the Buchenwald concentration camp. Then, at the age of 39, on April 9, 1945, just 2 days before the arrival of the Allied forces, Dietrich Bonhoeffer was hanged by the Nazis.

Despite Dietrich Bonhoeffer's heroics, he is still regarded by German law as a traitor. Ten years ago, German Parliament condemned Nazi "people's courts" and voided their convictions. However, the declaration did not pertain to the SS courts, where Mr. Bonhoeffer was condemned. Today, I formally urge my colleagues on both sides of the isle to support posthumous rehabilitation for Mr. Bonhoeffer and to urge the German Parliament to declare that all convictions by the SS courts were illegal.

Mr. President, Dietrich Bonhoeffer should serve as an inspiration to all of us for he sought change where change often times seemed impossible. He joined his church, and changed it. He lived in Nazi Germany where the message of a superior Aryan race separated man from man and thus man from God. But, rather than accept the Nazi dictatorship, he openly opposed Hitler and the regime. for his conviction to justice, equality, and peace, Dietrich Bonhoeffer had his life violently taken from him. Surely he deserves our best efforts to legally clear his name and to celebrate his legacy of courage and commitment.•

PROFESSIONAL SPORTS FRANCHISES IN SEATTLE

• Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, on February 2, the citizens of Seattle and of Washington State were dealt yet another low blow in their continuing struggle to maintain three professional sports franchises in Seattle. Unfortunately, it now seems that just as one team reaches the pinnacle of success in Seattle, another outsider owner of a local team decides that he no longer wishes to call Seattle its home. Last Friday, the owners of the Seattle Seahawks announced their intention to move the team from Seattle even though they have 10 years remaining on their contract with King County.

Why are they leaving? The Seahawk owners cite inadequate playing facilities and a lack of local government and community support. Lack of support? Consider the numerous years of sell-out crowds in the Kingdome. Consider the local and State subsidies that have supported this organization. If there is no community support, why did the Seahawk organization retire the No. 12 jersey? The number was retired in honor of all the Seahawk fans who have long served as the "twelfth man" on the Seahawks playing field. Lack of support?

As many of my colleagues may know, a great deal of my political career has been focused on maintaining a presence of professional sports franchises in Seattle. My involvement started late one evening in 1970, when the owners of the Seattle Pilots baseball team loaded their moving vans and headed east to Milwaukee, WI, after only 1 year in Seattle. As Washington State attorney, general, I successfully sued the American League to bring a new baseball club to Seattle in 1977—the Seattle Mariners—a suit that also resulted in the creation of the Toronto Blue Jays.

During its first 17 years of existence, the Mariner organization faced many of the expected challenges that confront any new sports franchise. This young baseball team was only able to produce two winning seasons in its first 17 years. While the adversity continued on the field, the difficulties facing the franchise off the field quickly became even more owerwhelming. The Mariners organization suffered increasing financial losses, fueling speculation that the team would leave Seattle. All of the succession of Mariner owners were underfunded outsiders unable to take the risks necessary for success. Finally in 1992, the threat became a reality, and the owners of the Mariners announced their intentions to move the baseball team to Florida. The fans, myself included reacted. A provision in the Mariners' contract with King County prohibited the midnight-loading of the moving vans. This local-option provision required that prior to any relocation to another city, the team first be put up for sale for 120 days and sold to any local buyers with a reasonable offer. With on 2 weeks left before the 120-day period expired, local business and community leaders, myself included, were able to secure the local resources to purchase the Mariners and keep the Mariners safe at home.

Last fall, after 18 long years, the fans of Washington State, and the team they fought so hard to keep, were finally rewarded when the Seattle Mariners won the American League Western Division Title. This championship fever should be the reward for fans when they dedicate themselves to supporting a professional sports team, not what is currently happening in Seattle and Cleveland.

Unfortunately for the fans of professional sports team, today's loyalty and gratitude given to professional teams is being returned with seriously harsh slaps in the face. Looking for news of a sports franchise relocation? Just open a newspaper. Within the last 18 months, two professional football organizations have moved cities and three more have announced their intentions to move prior to the 1996 season.

Mr. President, something has got to be done to bring some stability back to professional sports. Some question the role of the Government in professional sports leagues. I do not. Professional sports franchises rely on Federal tax dollars, participate in interstate commerce, and affect millions of people across the country. I have no doubt that there is a role for the Federal Government in creating standards and expectations of behavior. That is why I have cosponsored the Fans' Rights Act with my colleagues from Ohio, Senator GLENN and Senator DEWINE.

The Fans' Rights Act, S. 1439, seeks to restore stability and integrity to the current chaos that marks franchise relocations. It does this by giving professional sports league officials the ability to enforce their own rules through a limited antitrust exemption. This limited exemption will ensure that league officials can block franchise relocations they believe not to be in the best interests of their sport. The bill also provides for a 180-day notice period before any team can move. During that time, public hearings must be held, at which time a home community would have the opportunity to induce the team to stay. Finally, the Fans' Rights Act would prohibit the outrageous practice of teams buying the league's approval of a proposed relocation. Current practices allow the paying of relocation fees to the leagues and individual teams prior to the vote by the individual team owners to approve the move. The bill would require that the relocation fee be paid only after the vote of approval has taken place. The era of professional sports teams moving, only to leave behind fans, businesses, and communities who have invested emotional and financial support must come to an end, and this legislation attempts to do just that.

As chairman of the Consumer Subcommittee within the Commerce Committee, I intend to hold hearings on Fans' Rights Act sometime in early March. I will seek testimony from commissioners of all four professional leagues, player representatives, team owners, and elected officials from cities impacted by franchise relocation.

When this bill comes to the floor, it is also my intention to offer an amendment to include a provision similar to that that kept the Mariners in Seattle in 1992. Essentially, this provision would require a team to be put up for sale to local owners for 120 days prior to any relocation at a price to be set by arbitration. Fan loyalty and local support must be rewarded with local ownership, not the removal of the team.

Unfortunately for the Seahawk fans, even if we could enact the Fans' Rights Act into law tomorrow, this legislation will not reverse the clock in Seattle. The decision to relocate the team has been made, although a lawsuit is pending against the organization is a King County Superior Court, an action I believe likely to succeed. I have been invited by King County Executive Gary Locke to serve on a small task force of business and community leaders who will work together to ensure that professional football in Seattle does not become part of Seattle's fading history.

I would also like to take this opportunity to commend King County Executive Gary Locke, King County Prosecutor Norm Maleng, and members of the King County Council for all of their efforts thus far to save the Seahawks.

In closing Mr. President, I would like to send a message to sports fans in Washington State and around the country. While we are in the midst of troubling times with sports teams coming and sports teams leaving, I would like to assure each of you that your loyalty to professional sports franchises will not go unrewarded. Throughout the 8 weeks of the Mariners playoff excitement this fall, the residents of Seattle and the citizens of Washington State were part of an amazing roller-coaster ride that reached beyond anything that could ever be expected from professional sports. The great sense of community pride and support toward a single team, however, must be rewarded with loyalty from the team back to the community. The Seattle Mariners displayed this loyalty in their final game of the season, when all of the Mariner players came out of the clubhouse 20 minutes after game's end, to applaud the 58,000-plus fans who had encouraged the team during the championship run.

Mr. President, the Seahawks will not move and, I believe, Cleveland will not be deserted by the NFL either.

Mr. President, every fan deserves the opportunity to applaud his or her local sports team, and for loyalty from the owners in return. I hope that passing the Fans' Rights Act can begin to recognize that fans are equal players in the world of sports.•

THE NEED FOR A NATIONAL COMMISSION ON GAMBLING

• Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues a recent column in the Washington Post. Cowritten by our former colleague from Maryland, Joseph Tydings, the column cogently describes the importance of a national study on the social and economic impacts of gambling.

The impacts of gambling are regional, national, and international in scope. Local and State governments simply do not have access to the information they need to make wise decisions. Although local and State task forces and commissions continue to produce reports, these entities are not equipped to deal with the regional and national ramifications of local and State policies and tend to focus only on the short term. As the authors suggest, a national commission would help States a great deal.

Although the column is focused on Maryland, States and municipalities across the country are facing the same choices. Strapped for cash, many turn to casinos, riverboats, and lotteries. Gambling should not be the only choice. Identifying alternative sources of revenue will be prominent among the issues considered by a national commission.

I urge my colleagues to read the column and to work with me and the bipartisan group supporting S. 704, the Gambling Impact Study Commission Act.

I ask that the Washington Post column be printed in the RECORD.

The column follows:

CASINO GAMBLING: BRING IN THE FEDS

(By Joseph Tydings and Peter Reuter)

The recent opening of slot machines at two Delaware race tracks is a small event in itself but is yet another step along the path to coast-to-coast casinos that many states are reluctantly and uncertainly following. Notwithstanding the pressure from the Delaware move, Maryland's Joint Executive Legislative Task Force to Study Commercial Gambling, on which we served as chair and executive director, recommended against casinos last November.

One of the task force's major conclusions has been largely ignored by the media—namely, that the problem of legal casino gambling is a national one; Maryland cannot deal with this on its own. The problem cries out for attention from the president and Congress. Unfortunately, the casino industry has mobilized cash and lobbyists to prevent federal action on the issue.

The Maryland Task Force, in its full report, unhappily noted that, lacking a significant federally funded study, it has a very limited basis for making projections of what would happen if Maryland opened its doors to casinos, which nowadays get 70 percent of their revenues from slot machines. Given the limited statistical and economic analysis available, its opposition to casinos reflected a sensible caution.

Casinos do provide a credible promise of substantial financial gains to those states that are the first in their region to introduce them. Foxwoods casino in Connecticut (owned by the Mashantucket Pequot tribe under 1988 federal legislation that allows Indian tribes to operate casinos on certain tribal lands) now yields that state $115 million in tax revenues. Most of it comes from residents of Massachusetts, Rhode Island and New York who come to play in the world's largest casino. It employs more than 10,000 workers, offering good wages and benefits to many who would otherwise have more menial and unreliable jobs.

Not surprisingly, the state of Massachusetts feels it must also allow slots to compete and is now negotiating with the Wampanoag Indians to let the tribe operate a casino. The state of New York, which created a long legislative and referendum process to prevent a rash decision on casinos, has also responded to Connecticut by starting down a path that could lead to their introduction in 1998.

But the economic gains that entice states to open their doors to casinos are only substantial if neighboring states aren't competing for the same customers. If Maryland were the only state in its region to allow casinos, it might be able to justify building casinos that relied heavily on spending by Virginians, Pennsylvanians, Washingtonians and West Virginians. However, just as the Foxwoods' success had caused Connecticut's neighbors to move toward casinos, so would Maryland's advantage, if any, be short-lived.

The case for casinos has an element of vodoo economics—namely, the claim that providing a new form of entertainment will increase the economic base of the community or state by increasing local spending. Casino expenditures by Maryland citizens would come entirely through reductions in other leisure spending or even in spending on food, shelter and education. Casinos can provide economic development only by attracting spending from other states. Moreover, if casinos lead to greater consumer spending nationally, then clearly it has to come from reductions in people's savings—scarcely a desirable change for a country that chronically undersaves.

There are also important social costs to having casinos readily accessible. Many people have difficulty controlling their gambling, particularly in the artificial environment of a casino where liquor is freely offered and the game is available at all hours. Big gambling losses and the obsessive pursuit of gambling opportunities may lead to family breakdown and loss of productivity and community involvement. Embezzlement would probably rise. Casino patrons might also make attractive victims for criminal offenses. But whether this is a major problem or just a modest incidental to the simple pleasures of millions is still a matter of debate and in need of serious research.

The opponents of casinos often weaken their case by making exaggerated claims about the social consequences of gambling. Typical is the claim that "40 percent of all white-collar crimes come from pathological gambling," a hardy perennial that appears in all anti-casino writings. It is supposedly the product of the American Insurance Institute. In fact, no such organization exists, and no one has ever been able to locate a copy of a report documenting the claim. Nor is there much more basis for the frequent claim that each problem gambler costs society $30,000 annually.

An authoritative and independent assessment of the economic and social consequences of casinos would help states a great deal. A federal commission needs to do systematic analysis of the kind that state task forces, with their short time horizons and minuscule budgets (ours had six months and a total of $50,000 for its work), cannot muster. There seems to be strong congressional support for such a commission, notwithstanding aggressive lobbying against it by the casino industry.

The national commission would also have to focus on the very troubling issue of Indian tribal gambling. Providing Indian tribes with better economic opportunities is clearly an important and legitimate goal, but when those opportunities result in large costs being borne by the entire nation, then the issue needs to be revisited.

In the meantime, states like Maryland will feel a constant pressure from their neighbors to avoid having good Maryland money turn into Delaware gambling revenues. The growing burden of social services on state finances as the federal government cuts back its support will increase that pressure, so that in the next downturn many states may reluctantly, but irreversibly, become casino states as well. A federal commission and some sensible national policy are needed, as soon.•

OPEN TOBACCO HEARINGS ARE NEEDED

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise to make a few comments about Sunday's "60 Minutes" program on Dr. Jeffrey Wigand and his statements about what went on inside the Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co.

Mr. President, for those who did not see this interview, Dr. Wigand told the Nation that Brown & Williamson acknowledged that cigarettes are a "nicotine delivery" device and that senior management rejected his efforts to make their tobacco products safer.

Dr. Wigand also claimed that Brown & Williamson knowingly used carcinogens in their tobacco products.

Mr. President, if these allegations were found to be true—if Brown & Williamson knew that nicotine was addictive, if the company knew that its products contained carcinogens, if it withheld this information from the public and this resulted in unnecessary death and disease—it would be absolutely unconscionable.

Mr. President, I ask that a transcript of this interview be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

Mr. President, these accusations made by Dr. Wigand are extremely serious and I believe that Congress and the American people should fully understand the real dangers of tobacco products and all of the recent allegations involving the tobacco industry.

Mr. President, there is so much activity and confusion about tobacco these days.

Let me tell my colleagues about some of the legal matters that are currently pending:

Five States are actively suing the tobacco companies for Medicaid costs associated with tobacco related illnesses of their residents. Other States are seriously considering similar action, including my home State.

On the Federal level, I have introduced legislation to recoup all Medicare and Medicaid costs spent on tobacco related illnesses, some $20 billion a year, directly from the tobacco companies.

There is a multibillion-dollar class action suit against the tobacco companies going on in New Orleans. It is commonly referred to as the Castano case. The plaintiffs are former smokers and survivors who claim that the tobacco companies knew that nicotine was addictive and dangerous but never told their customers.

There is a Justice Department probe underway to investigate whether the seven tobacco companies' CEO's perjured themselves before Congressman WAXMAN's subcommittee when they testified they did not believe nicotine was addictive.

Because of all of these current legal activities, there have been numerous leaks about the dangers of tobacco in the print and television media. However, Congress and the American people are only getting bits and pieces of the entire story because of the intense legal climate surrounding this entire issue.

This is why I wrote a letter to Senators KASSEBAUM and KENNEDY asking them to hold hearings in the Labor and Human Resources Committee about the entire tobacco issue. I have spoken personally to Senator KASSEBAUM and she assured me that she would seriously consider this request. I also spoke with Senator KENNEDY who is deeply interested in all health issues including the health effects of tobacco and would like to set up hearings on this subject.

Mr. President, I ask that a copy of this letter be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

Mr. President, the Congress, on behalf of the American people, needs to find out the truth about the addictive nature of nicotine, the health effects of tobacco use and all of the recent allegations involving the tobacco industry. We need this information so that we can evaluate the need for legislation regulating the tobacco industry and trying to recoup the cost of tobacco related illnesses.

It is clear that the only way for Congress and the American people to get all of this information is to have open hearings in the Senate—so that we can secure for the record as much information as possible.

On the House side, unfortunately, there is little chance of hearings. Congressman BLILEY, from Richmond, VA, chairman of the Commerce Committee, has indicated that his committee will not permit these issues to be aired.

I hope that things will be different in the Senate. I hope that both Democrats and Republicans will see the value in holding hearings on this critical issue. Only then, will the Congress and the public be fully informed about the dangers of a product that takes over 400,000 lives per year.

Mr. President, we cannot sit idly by and listen to these types of allegations and do nothing.

TRANSCRIPT FROM 60 MINUTES, FEBRUARY 4, 1966

MIKE WALLACE. A story we set out to report six months ago has now turned into two stories: how cigarettes can destroy people's lives; and how one cigarette company is trying to destroy the reputation of a man who refused to keep quiet about what he says he learned when he worked for them. The Company is Brown & Williamson, America's third-largest tobacco company. The man they've set out to destroy is Dr. Jeffrey Wigand, their former $300,000 a year director of research.

They employed prestigious law firms to sue him, a high-powered investigation firm to probe every nook and cranny of his life. And they hired a big-time public relations consultant to help them plant damaging stories about him in The Washington Post, The Wall Street Journal and others. But the Journal reported the story for what they though it was. "Scant evidence" was just one of their comments.

CBS management wouldn't let us broadcast our original story and our interview with Jeffrey Wigand because they were worried about the possibility of a multibillion dollar lawsuit against us for "tortions" interference—that is, interfering with Wigand's confidentiality agreement with Brown & Williamson. But now things have changed. Last week The Wall Street Journal got hold of and published a confidential deposition Wigand gave in a Mississippi case, a November deposition that repeated many of the charges he made to us last August. And while a lawsuit is still a possibility, not putting Jeffrey Wigand's story on 60 minutes no longer is.

WALLACE (Voiceover). What Dr. Wigand told us in that original interview was that his former colleagues, executives of Brown & Williamson tobacco, knew all along that their tobacco products, their cigarettes and pipe tobacco, contained additives that increased the danger of disease; and further, that they had long known that the nicotine in tobacco is an addictive drug, despite their public statement to the countrary, like the testimony before Congress of Dr. Wigand's former boss, B&W chief executive officer Thomas Sandefur.

Mr. THOMAS SANDEFUR (Chief Executive Officer, Brown & Williamson). I believe that nicotine is not addictive.

Dr. JEFFREY WIGAND (Testifying Against Brown & Williamson). I believe he perjured himself because——

[Footage of congressional hearing.]

Dr. WIGAND (Voiceover). I watched those testimonies very carefully.

WALLACE (Voiceover). All of us did. There was the whole line of people-the-the whole line of CEOs up there, all swearing that——

Dr. WIGAND: And part of the reason I'm here is I felt that their representation, clearly—at least within Brown & Williamson's representation, clearly, misstated what they commonly knew as language within the company: that we're in a nicotine-delivery business.

WALLACE. And that's what cigarettes are for.

Dr. WIGAND. Most certainly. It's a delivery device for nicotine.

WALLACE. A delivery device for nicotine.

Dr. WIGAND. Nicotine.

WALLACE. Put it in your mouth, light it up and you're going to get your fix.

Dr. WIGAND. You'll get your fix.

WALLACE. Dr. Wigand says that Brown & Williamson manipulates and adjusts that nicotine fix, not by artificially adding nicotine, but by enhancing the effect of the nicotine through the use of chemical additive like ammonia. This process is know in the tobacco industry as "impact boosting.

Dr. WIGAND. While not spiking nicotine, they clearly manipulate it.

[Footage of Brown & Williamson Root Technology handbook.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). The process is described in Brown & Williamson's leaf blender's manual and in other B&W documents.

Dr. WIGAND. There's extensive use of this technology, which is called ammonia chemistry, that allows for nicotine to be more rapidly absorbed in the lungs and, therefore, affect the brain and central nervous system.

[Footage of documents in file cabinet; computer screen; Williams walking; Glantz; Journal of the American Medical Association.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). And then there are these documents, thousands of pages of confidential scientific reports and legal memoranda from B&W's secret files, which experts say support Dr. Wigand's claim that Brown & Williamson's executives have had strong reason to believe all along that nicotine is addictive and that their tobacco products cause cancer and other diseases. Most of these documents had been locked away in B&W's lawyers' confidential files in Louisville, Kentucky, until this man, the paralegal in that law office, Merrill Williams, walked off with them. The documents found their way to Dr. Stanton Glantz, a professor of medicine at the University of California Medical Center in San Francisco. It was Dr. Glantz and a team of scientists from the university who wrote about the documents this past summer in a series of articles in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

What is the story that the documents told you?

Dr. STANTON GLANTZ (University of California Medical Center). They told me that 30 years ago Brown & Williamson and British-American Tobacco, its parent, knew nicotine was an addictive drug, and they knew smoking caused cancer and other diseases.

[Footage of Glantz.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). And Dr. Glantz says these documents reveal how Brown & Williamson was keeping that knowledge from the public.

Dr. GLANTZ. And they also developed very sophisticated legal strategies to keep this information away from the public, to keep this information away from public health authorities.

WALLACE. Dr. Wigand said that the cigarette is basically a nicotine delivery instrument. That's what it's really all about.

Dr. GLANTZ. Yes, absolutely. And they—in the documents, they say that over and over and over again.

[Footage of smokers.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). And finding a way to deliver that nicotine to the smoker's brain without exposing smokers to disease-causing pollutants, like tar that come with tobacco smoke, is one reason, says Dr. Wigand, that he was hired by B&W on January 1st, 1989.

Dr. WIGAND. They were looking to reduce the hazards within cigarettes, reduce the carcinogenic components—or—or list the carcinogens that were within the tobacco products.

WALLACE. They talked about carcinogens to you?

Dr. WIGAND. Talked about carcinogens——

WALLACE. They talked about cancer and heart disease and emphysema and all of those things——

Dr. WIGAND. They talked about——

WALLACE. ——and they were going to work toward making a safer cigarette? You must have been very excited.

Dr. WIGAND. I was enthusiastic and energetic in terms of pursuing that.

[Footage of Wigand; a smoker.]

WALLACE. Dr. Jeffrey Wigand, with a doctorate in biochemistry, had spent nearly 20 years working in the health-care and biotechnology industries. He says his goal at B&W was to make a cigarette that would be less likely to cause disease.

Dr. WIGAND (Voiceover). People will continue to smoke no matter what, no matter what kind of regulations.

If you can provide for those who are smoking and who need to smoke something that produces less risk for them—I thought I was going to be making a difference.

[Footage of newspaper story of Wigand.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). Brown & Williamson made Jeff Wigand vice president for R&D, paying him more than $300,000 a year in salary and perks.

Dr. WIGAND. And I was very inquisitive when I came on. "Have you ever done any nicotine studies? Have you done any pharmacology studies? Have you done any biological studies? Have you looked at the effect of nicotine on the central nervous system?" And they always, general categorically, "No, we don't do that kind of work."

[Footage of Brown & Williamson Tower; Wigand.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). But according to those thousands of pages from B&W and its parent, British-American tobacco's, confidential files, the company had, in fact, done exactly those kinds of studies. Dr. Wigand says he did not suspect there was anything wrong until he attended a meeting of scientists who worked for British-American tobacco companies from around the world. Dr. Wigand says that his colleagues talked about working together to develop a safer, a less-hazardous cigarette, a cigarette less likely to cause disease. But when it came time to write up their ideas, to create a documentary record of their discussion, B&W's lawyers intervened.

Dr. WIGAND. The minutes that came in were roughly about 18 pages long describ— the co—I knew what was in the content. The—they were rewritten by Kendrick Wells. They were—

WALLACE. Who's he?

Dr. WIGAND. Kendrick Wells was the—one of the staff attorneys at B&W.

WALLACE. And he rewrote the minutes of the meeting?

Dr. WIGAND. He rewrote the minutes of the meeting. He edited out the discussions on safer cigarette and, basically, toned the meeting down.

WALLACE. You're saying that one of the staff attornyes from B&W, here in the United States, whose name was——

Dr. WIGAND. Kendrick Wells.

WALLACE. ——an attorney——

Dr. WIGAND. Mm-hmm.

WALLACE. ——rewrote the minutes of this research meeting with all of the research heads of BAT Industries——

Dr. WIGAND. That's correct.

WALLACE. ——in order to sanitize it, in a sense.

Dr. WIGAND. Sanitize it, as well as reduce any type of exposure associated with discussing a safer cigarette. When you say you're going to have a safer cigarette——

WALLACE. Mm-hmm.

Dr. WIGAND. ——but that now takes everything else that you have available and say it—it's unsafe, and that from a products liability point of view, gave the lawyers great concern.

[Footage of Wells; files; cigarettes on conveyor belt; files.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). Kendrick Wells, the lawyer Dr. Wigand says deleted materials from the minutes of the scientific meeting, is now the assistant general counsel of B&W. Why would B&W lawyers like Kendrick Wells be so concerned? According to B&W's own confidential files, any evidence, any documents that show any B&W tobacco product, like Kools or Viceroys, might be unsafe, those documents would have to be produced in court as part of any lawsuit filed by a smoker or his surviving family. And according to the lawyers, those documents could be disastrous for B&W. So the lawyers took over.

Dr. WIGAND (Voiceover). The lawyers intervened.

And then they purged documents every time there was a reference to a word "less hazardous" or "safer."

[Footage of Wigand.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). But Dr. Wigand says the lawyers' interference, their editing and review of his reports, did not stop him.

Dr. WIGAND. And I started asking more probing questions and I started digging deeper and deeper. As I dug deeper and deeper, I started getting a bodyguard.

WALLACE. What do you mean a bodyguard?

Dr. WIGAND. I went to a meeting; I now was accompanied by a lawyer. My bodyguard was Kendrick Wells.

WALLACE (Voiceover). Frustrated by the lawyers' intervention and presence at major scientific meetings, Dr. Wigand says he took his complaints to Thomas Sandefur, then the president of B&W.

What'd he say to you?

Dr. WIGAND. "I don't want to hear any more discussion about a safer cigarette."

[Still shot of B&W executive.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). And he says Thomas Sandefur went on to tell him——

Dr. WIGAND. "We pursue a safer cigarette, it would put us at extreme exposure with every other product. I don't want to hear about it anymore."

WALLACE. All the people who were dying from cigarettes.

Dr. WIGAND. Essentially, yes.

WALLACE. Cancer——

Dr. WIGAND. Cancer.

WALLACE. ——heart disease, things of that nature.

Dr. WIGAND. Emphysema.

[Still shot of Sandefur; footage of Wigand.]

WALLACE. (Voiceover). Lawyers representing B&W and Thomas Sandefur have said that all this, as well as other accounts of conversations with Thomas Sandefur, are absolutely false. We asked Dr. Wigand what his reaction was to what he says was Sandefur's decision to abandon a safer cigarette.

Dr. WIGAND. I would say I got angry.

WALLACE. He was your boss.

Dr. WIGAND. I bit my tongue. I had just transitioned from another—one company to another. I was paid well. It was comfortable. And for me to do anything precipitous would put my family at risk.

WALLACE. You were happy to take down the 300,000 bucks a year.

Dr. WIGAND. I, essentially, yeah, took the money. I did my job.

WALLACE. So Dr. Wigand abandoned his idea of trying to develop a new and safer cigarette. He turned his attention to investigating the additives, the flavorings, the other compounds in B&W tobacco products. Many, like glycerol, which is used to keep the tobacco in cigarettes moist, are normally harmless. But when glycerol is burned in a cigarette, its chemistry changes.

Dr. WIGAND. Glycerol, when it's burnt, forms a—a very specific substance called acrolein.

[Footage of book; excerpt from book; smokers.]

WALLACE. (Voiceover). According to the American Council on Science and Health, acrolin, or acrolEIN, is extremely irritating and has been shown to interfere with the normal clearing of the lungs. Recent research shows that acrolein acts like a carcinogen, though not yet classified as such. And Dr. Wigand says that B&W continues to add glycerol to their product. But it was another additive that Dr. Wigand says led to the end of his career at B&W.

Dr. WIGAND. The straw that broke the c— the camel's back for me and really put me in trouble with Sandefur was a compound called coumarin.

[Footage of smoker; medical record on mice experiment; B&W documents.]

WALLACE. (Voiceover). Coumarin is a flavoring that provides a sweet taste to tobacco products, but is known to cause tumors in the livers of mice. It was removed from B&W cigarettes, but according to these documents, B&W continued to use it in its Sir Walter Raleigh aromatic pipe tobacco until at least 1992.

Dr. WIGAND. And when I came on board at B&W, they had tried to tend—transition from coumarin to another similar flavor that would give the same taste. And it was unsuccessful.

[Footage of Wigand and Wallace; report.]

WALLACE. (Voiceover). Dr. Wigand says the news about coumarin and cancer got worse. This report by independent researchers, part of a national toxic safety program, presented evidence that coumarin is a carcinogen that causes various cancers.

Dr. WIGAND. I wanted it out immediately. And I was told that it would affect sales and I was to mind my own business. And then I constructed a memo to Mr. Sandefur indicating that I could not, in conscience, continue with coumarin, a product that we now knowingly have documentation that is lung-specific, carcinogen.

WALLACE. Right. Sent the document forward to Sandefur?

Dr. WIGAND. I sent the document forward to Sandefur. I was told that—that we would continue working on a substitute, and we weren't going to remove it because it would impact sales. And that's—that was his decision.

WALLACE. In other words, what you're charging Sandefur with and Brown & Williamson with is, "ignoring health considerations consciously".

Dr. WIGAND. Most certainly.

[Footage of Wigand].

WALLACE (Voiceover). After his confrontations over coumarin, Dr. Wigand says he was not surprised when, on March the 24th, 1993, Thomas Sandefur, newly promoted to chief executive officer, CEO of B&W, had him fired.

And the reason for firing that he gave you?

Dr. WIGAND. Poor communication skills, just not cutting it, poor performance.

[Footage of Wigand and his family at dinner table.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). When Dr. Wigand, who has a wife and two young daughters, was fired by Brown & Williamson tobacco, his contract provided severance pay and critical health benefits for his family, critical because one of his children requires expensive daily health care. Several months after he was fired, B&W decided to sue their former head of R&D and they cut off his severance and those vital health benefits.

Dr. WIGAND. They said I violated my confidentiality agreement by discussing my severance package.

[Footage of Wigand and Lucretia walking.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). Lucretia Wigand says that the firing and B&W's suspension of benefits was devastating.

Mrs. LUCRETIA WIGAND (Dr. Jeffrey Wigand's Wife). We almost lost our family as a unit. Jeff and I almost separated.

WALLACE. Why?

Mrs. WIGAND. Because he was under so much stress and—so much pressure that it was something that we needed help dealing with. We went to counseling and we worked through it.

WALLACE. And this was, you think, started—triggered by the business with B&W?

Mrs. WIGAND. Yes. I know it was.

[Footage of Wigand in his kitchen; document.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). B&W settled that lawsuit we mentioned and reinstated those critical health benefits, only after Dr. Wigand agreed to sign a new, stricter, lifelong confidentiality agreement.

Nontheless, word of Dr. Wigand's battles with Brown & Williamson attracted attention in Washington, where, in the spring of 1994, Democratic Congress and the FDA, the Food & Drug Administration, were investigating the tobacco industry. Dr. Wigand was contacted by their investigators, and after notifying Brown & Williamson, he talked with those investigators. Shortly afterward, he was stunned by a couple of anonymous telephone calls.

Dr. WIGAND. And in April 1994, on two separate occasions, I had life threats on my kids.

WALLACE. What?

Dr. WIGAND. We had life threats on my kids.

[Footage of Wigand and Wallace.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). Dr. Wigand told us he doesn't know where they came from, but that, understandably, they frightened him. He described the threats by referring to his diary.

Dr. WIGAND. "A male voice that was on the phone that said, 'Don't mess with tobacco anymore. How are your kids?'" Then on April 28th, around 3:00 in the afternoon, relative the same voice—he says, "Leave tobacco alone or else you'll find your kids hurt. They're pretty girls now." So I got scared. I started carrying a gun.

WALLACE. Really?

Dr. WIGAND. Yep. Started carrying a handgun.

Mrs. WIGAND. Someone called and threatened to—to kill him and to hurt the family if he messed with the tobacco industry.

WALLACE. That was last August. Now in February, Lucretia Wigand has filed for divorce, citing spousal abuse, just one of the accusations Brown & Williamson is using in their full-throated campaign to discredit Jeffrey Wigand. That report when we return.

[Commercial break.]

WALLACE. Today, three years after he was fired by Brown & Williamson, Dr. Jeffrey Wigand is the star witness in a US Justice Department criminal investigation into the tobacco industry, which includes the question of whether B&W's former CEO lied to the US Congress when he said that he believed that nicotine was not addictive. But Dr. Wigand is paying a heavy price for his decision to testify, as well as for breaking his confidentiality agreement by talking to us. His family life has been shattered, his reputation has been tarnished because of B&W's massive campaign designed to silence him and to discredit this former research chief turned whistle-blower.

They're trying to do what they can to paint you as irresponsible, a liar——

Dr. WIGAND. Well, I think the word they've used, Mike, is a "master of deceit."

WALLACE. You wish you hadn't come forward? You wish you hadn't blown the whistle?

Dr. WIGAND. There are times I wish I hadn't done it, but there are times that I feel compelled to do it. I—if you ask me if I would do it again or if it—do I think it's worth it, yeah, I think it's worth it. I think in the end people will see the truth.

[Footage of state attorneys general of Florida, Minnesota and Mississippi.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). Well, these three men have seen the same truth as Wigand. They are the state attorney's general of Florida, Minnesota and Mississippi, where Dr. Wigand is testifying in a multibillion-dollar lawsuit against the tobacco industry. Mike Moore is attorney general of Mississippi.

Mr. MOORE. Jeffrey's testimony is going to be devastating, Mike, to the tobacco industry, so devastating that I fear for his life. I think——

WALLACE. Are you serious?

Mr. MOORE. I'm—I'm very serious. The information that Jeffrey has, I think, is the most important information that has ever come out against the tobacco industry. This industry, in my opinion, is an industry who has perpetrated the biggest fraud on the American public in history. They have lied to the American public for years and years. They have killed millions and millions of people and made a profit on it. So I hope that they won't continue to lie and try to destroy Jeffrey like they destroyed the other lives of people all over this country.

[Footage of newspaper clippings; Wigand and Wallace; The Investigative Group Inc. sign.]

WALLACE [Voiceover]. The campaign to destroy Dr. Jeffrey Wigand began over two months ago in the midst of a media frenzy over our failure to broadcast our August interview with him. Brown & Williamson sued Dr. Wigand for talking to us, despite his confidentiality agreement. And they got a court order in Kentucky to try to silence him from speaking out further. Then investigators hired by B&W fanned out across the country looking for anything they could use to discredit the whistle-blower.

Dr. WIGAND. They've been going around to my family, my friends, digging up and digging here and digging there.

WALLACE. Then their lawyers—and B&W has a half-dozen major firms working on the Jeff Wigand case—their lawyers compiled the results of their nationwide dragnet into a summary that alleges that, in recent years, Dr. Wigand pled guilty to everything from wife-beating to shoplifting. Beyond that, they charged him with a multitude of sins, from fudging his resume to making a false claim three years ago for $95.20 for dry cleaning.

[Footage of Scanlon.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). Then Brown & Williamson retained John Scanlon to get their story to the media. Scanlon is a fixture of the New York media scene, who has close, personal relationships with print and television reporters and producers, as well as editors and publishers. We asked him to sit down and discuss the charges he has been circulating to me and other reporters, but he declined. But Scanlon did make this statement to a CBS News camera crew.

Mr. JOHN SCANLON (New York). He's running from cross-examination. His victims have decided to respond and present evidence that he is, in fact, a habitual liar.

Dr. WIGAND. The smear campaign—it's been very systematic, very organized, very well done.

(Speaking to class). My background is I have a PhD in biochemistry.

[Footage of Wigand teaching class; news broadcast.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). Today Dr. Wigand is a $30,000 a year science teacher at a Louisville, Kentucky, public high school. And his students, his faculty colleagues and his family were stunned last month when a Louisville television station broadcast some of Brown & Williamson's accusations.

Unidentified Reporter (From news broadcast). Court records show Wigand was charged with theft by unlawful taking and shoplifting.

WALLACE (Voiceover). Then the Brown & Williamson 500-page dossier on Wigand was given to The Wall Street Journal, who investigated the charges. And last Thursday in this front-page story, The Journal reported that, quote, "a close look at the file and independent research by this newspaper into its key claims indicates that many of the serious allegations against Dr. Wigand are backed by scanty or contradictory evidence." And they continued, quote, "Some of the charges, including that he pleaded guilty to shoplifting, are demonstrably untrue." We put that Journal statement to Gordon Smith, an attorney designated by Brown & Williamson to talk to us.

The Wall Street Journal went through all of that material. It says that what—the dossier that you put together: "scant evidence."

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Wallace, that's dead wrong. There is not scant evidence. The Wall Street Journal did not——

WALLACE. It——

Mr. SMITH. ——did not go over the scores—literally scores of untruths told by Jeff Wigand that we showed to them.

[Footage of Smith and Wallace.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). And Gordon Smith went on at some length to say that Wigand's life, quote, "is a pattern of lies."

Well, I don't understand, frankly, Mr. Smith. I really don't understand. Brown & Williamson must be in a panic if they are going after this man as hard as you are.

Mr. SMITH. You're wrong. There are no material inaccuracies in that book, none whatsoever.

[Footage of performance appraisal document on Wigand; Wigand; letter.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). But not included in that dossier were Brown & Williamson's own personnel records, which showed that Wigand had received good performance appraisals for the first three years from B&W. In his fourth year, however, those appraisals turned sour. But despite that, even after he was fired, he received this letter from Brown & Williamson's personnel director.

"To whom it may concern, Dr. Jeffrey Wigand was instrumental in the development of new products, as well as the major impetus behind a significant upgrade in our R&D technical capabilities, both in terms of people and equipment. During his tenure at Brown & Williamson, Dr. Wigand demonstrated a high level of technical knowledge and expertise."

And this is on your own stationery, your own man saying bad about him.

Mr. SMITH. Mike, Brown & Williamson refused to be a reference for Jeff Wigand after he left. This letter was negotiated with his attorney, and it was the only statement Brown & Williamson would ever make about him because Brown & Williamson did not want to be a reference for Jeff Wigand.

[Footage of Smith and Wallace.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). And Mr. Smith had this to say about our relationship with Jeffrey Wigand.

Mr. SMITH. You're being led along by a guy who's not believable. You're getting half the story.

WALLACE. Well, then why——

Mr. SMITH. You—you—and you've got—you've got a—a vested interest in making this man credible.

WALLACE. Why do we have a vested interest?

Mr. SMITH. CBS has—has paid this guy $12,000.

WALLACE. For what?

Mr. SMITH. I believe for consulting.

WALLACE. Now wait just a moment. Let's get this straight. Paid him $12,000 for what?

Mr. SMITH. To consult on a story for CBS.

WALLACE. For the record, as we explained to Mr. Smith, 60 Minutes did, in fact, hire Dr. Wigand two years ago to act as our expert consultant to analyze nearly 1,000 pages of technical documents leaked to us, not from Brown & Williamson, but from inside Philip Morris, another tobacco company. At that time, Dr. Wigand told us he would not talk with us about Brown & Williamson. And he did not, until over a year later.

Dr. WIGAND. I felt an obligation to tell the truth. There were things I saw, there were things I learned, there was things I observed that I felt—that need to be told. The focus continues to be on what I would call systematic and aggressive ta—tactics to undermine my credibility and my—some of my personal life.

WALLACE. But you expected that, didn't you?

Dr. WIGAND. Well, I didn't expect to the extent it would—it's happened, OK? It's—it's disrupted not only my life—I'm in divorce proceedings now.

[Footage of state attorneys general.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). These three state attorneys general say that no matter what B&W's accusations are, they remain convinced that what Wigand has to say about the tobacco industry in general, and Brown & Williamson in particular, is thoroughly credible.

They are suing the tobacco industry for the billions of dollars in state Medicaid costs their states have paid to treat people who have become ill from smoking. Minnesota Attorney General Hubert Humphrey III.

Mr. HUBERT HUMPHREY III (Minnesota Attorney General). We want to see the full truth come out. We want the deception and fraud and the violations of our state laws stopped. And we want people that are making the money on this product to bear the full cost of the health-care burden that is there.

[Footage of state attorneys general.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). Bob Butterworth is the attorney general of Florida.

Mr. BOB BUTTERWORTH (Florida Attorney General). The issue has been deceit.

WALLACE. Deceit.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Pure and simple deceit. The cigarette companies made a decision that they would withhold valuable information from the American public, information that the consumer would need to make a—an intelligent decision as to whether or not they wish to smoke or not to smoke.

[Footage of Moore.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). Again, Mississippi Attorney General Mike Moore.

Mr. MOORE. I'm used to dealing with—with cocaine dealers and—and crack dealers, and I have never seen damage done like the tobacco company has done. There's no comparison. Cocaine kills 10,000, 15,000 people a year in this country. Tobacco kills 425,000 people a year.

Mr. SMITH. Mike, it's absurd to suggest that tobacco is any way like cocaine in terms of addiction. It's absolutely absurd to suggest that. Brown & Williamson makes a lawful product. They sell it and make it in a lawful way.

WALLACE Well, then why do 425,000 people die every year—according to all medical and scientific evaluations, die of smoking cigarettes? Why?

Mr. SMITH. Mike, 50 million people choose to use tobacco and smoke.

WALLACE. So on a cost-benefit ratio, it's only 425,000 people who die out of the 50 million?

Mr. SMITH. No, Mike.

WALLACE. That's—that's a—a—a small fraction. Is that the point you're making?

Mr. SMITH. No, Mike, not at all. People choose to smoke. People choose to stop smoking. I think you used to smoke and you chose to stop smoking.

WALLACE. That's right.

Mr. SMITH. It's their choice. It's a lawful product. It's marketed and manufactured lawfully.

[Footage of Wigand and Wallace.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). B&W has questioned Dr. Wigand's character. But he says that's just a smoke screen, and he has some questions for Brown & Williamson.

Dr. WIGAND. Why don't they deal with the issue of whether they can develop or—a safer cigarette? Why don't they deal with the issue of using—and knowingly using additives that are known to be carcinogenic in order not to influence sales? Why don't we deal with that issue?

WALLACE. Brown & Williamson did answer some of Dr. Jeffrey Wigand's questions for us. They told us they have removed coumarin—that's carcinogenic flavoring—from their Sir Walter Raleigh aromatic pipe tobacco, but they insist it never posed a health risk to smokers. B&W lawyer Kendrick Wells declined to talk to us, but he did deny, in testimony last week, Dr. Wigand's charge that he had altered the minutes of that scientific meeting. And B&W says the truth will come out in the end when they get a chance to cross-examine Dr. Wigand under oath.

And they insist that we, CBS, cannot report on this story objectively since we are indemnifying Dr. Wigand in B&W's lawsuit against him. Two months ago CBS agreed to do that after a leak resulted in the disclosure of Dr. Wigand's identity before he was prepared to go public. Though still unaware of where that leak had come from, CBS decided to take financial responsibility for the impact that leak had on Dr. Wigand because it exposed him to a lawsuit by Brown & Williamson.

A footnote.

[Footage of That Courier-Journal headline and article.]

WALLACE (Voiceover). This banner headline yesterday in the Louisville Courier-Journal, B&W's hometown newspaper, about charges their employees and engaged in smuggling and bribes in Louisiana.

In that story, the US attorney in New Orleans says, "Look for some indictments in the very near future."

FEBRUARY 5, 1996.

Hon. NANCY L. KASSEBAUM,
Chairwoman, Committee on Labor and Human Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.
Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Ranking Member, Committee on Labor and Human Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS KASSEBAUM AND KENNEDY: I am writing to urge you to schedule hearings in your Committee on recent disclosures about the health effects of tobacco products and the nicotine contained in them. I believe that recent legal tactics by the tobacco industry have led to the suppression of vital public health information about Congress. Consequently, Members of Congress have had to rely on leaks and incomplete information concerning the health effects of tobacco and nicotine. It would be an enormous service to Congress for your Committee to hold comprehensive hearings on this matter because there are at least 42 bills affecting the growth, sale and promotion of tobacco products pending before Congress.

1995 was a year full of revelations about the tobacco industry and the content of its cigarettes. There were various articles on allegations of nicotine manipulation by tobacco companies. Despite this trickling out of information on the dangers of tobacco, there were two infamous incidents in 1995 that set dangerous precedents.

First, Philip Morris sued Capital Cities/ABC for $10 billion over its report that this tobacco giant "spiked" its cigarettes with nicotine. R.J. Reynolds later filed a similar lawsuit against Capital Cities/ABC. These two companies pressured Capital Cities/ABC to settle these suits despite the fact that its story appeared to be factually supported by interviews and internal company documents.

Second, the CBS news program 60 Minutes canceled an interview with a former Brown and Williamson tobacco executive due to fears of a lawsuit, even though its reporters believed in the accuracy of the interview and the reporting. While CBS has subsequently agreed to air this piece, it apparently has done so only because of a recent leak in the Wall Street Journal involving the same former executive.

These two episodes have sent a chilling message to the media about reporting new information on the health consequences of tobacco. If these two major broadcast networks are intimidated by these tobacco companies, then smaller news organizations would seem to face even greater challenges in reporting important stories on the health effects of tobacco and nicotine. The mere threat of legal action will likely force the suppression of critical information on tobacco and nicotine from being reported in the press and subsequently used by Members of Congress. Therefore, it appears that the only way that Congress will be able to get complete information on the health effects of tobacco and nicotine is if your Committee holds comprehensive hearings.

I know that you will conduct balanced hearings and I fully expect that you would include witnesses from all points of view, including representatives of the tobacco industry. This will allow Congress, and the American people, to hear all sides and be fully informed about the health effects of tobacco and nicotine. This will also allow Congress to consider pending legislation affecting tobacco in a well educated manner.

Thank you for your consideration of this request. I would be happy to work with you so that these hearings can be held as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

FRANK LAUTENBERG.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I further ask unanimous consent that following the prayer on Friday, February 23, the Journal of proceedings be deemed approved to date, no resolutions come over under the rule, the call of the calendar be dispensed with, the morning hour be deemed to have expired, and the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and there then be a period for morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 1 p.m. with the time equally divided between the two parties, and that following the use or yielding back of time, morning business be closed and the Senate then turn to the conference report to accompany the District of Columbia appropriations bill, and the conference report be considered as read.

Mr. DOLE. On Friday, February 23, the Senate will conduct a period for morning business, and following morning business it will be the majority leader's intention to file a cloture motion on the District of Columbia appropriations conference report. Therefore, votes will not occur on Friday, February 23.

It will be the majority leader's intention to set the cloture vote on the D.C. appropriations conference report for Tuesday, February 27, 1996, at 2:15 p.m.

I further ask that when the Senate completes its business on Friday, February 23, it stand in recess until 3 p.m. on Monday, February 26; that immediately following the prayer, Senator AKAKA be recognized to read Washington's Farewell Address. It will be the leader's intention to then recess following the address until 11 a.m. on Tuesday, February 27, 1996.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1996

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I ask that the Senate stand in recess between the hours of 12:30 p.m. and 2:15 p.m. on Tuesday, February 27, in order for the weekly party conferences to meet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Again, for the information of all Senators, the first rollcall vote will occur at 12:15 on Tuesday, February 27, 1996, and that vote will be a cloture vote with respect to the D.C. appropriations conference report.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE SENATE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me indicate that I think we have accomplished a great deal this year in the Senate, and we will accomplish a great deal more. Normally there is a period of recess for Lincoln's birthday so Republicans can go out and do whatever they do during that week, and then there is a later period of a week for Democrats.

I regret that we could not adjourn the Senate to accommodate many members of the staff who will now be required probably to stay here, because if we take a look at last year, we came in early in January and stayed throughout the year with hardly any breaks. I am not complaining about that, but those are the facts. I should know. I think we may have set records with the number of votes and the number of hours in session. It was truly a remarkable year, and we accomplished a great deal. We have a great deal more to do this year. I regret that we were unable to just recess. There will be no votes until February 27, and perhaps members of the staff whom I am looking at now can work out some little time to have some relaxation and rest because they certainly deserve it. We have had long sessions. We have been in late at night and some of us were here during the holidays negotiating with the President trying to work out a budget agreement. We do not have it yet.

America's Governors may have moved it along a little bit. We are still not in accord with the President, and we hope that might be possible. I must say the American people will only accept a good agreement, not a game of arithmetic, but policy changes that will mean a great deal to the American people, bring interest rates down a couple of percent so that when you buy a home or car or borrow money for one of your children going to college or whatever, you will pay 2 percent less interest. The American people can understand that. That is what the first session was all about, and that is what the second session is going to be all about.

In the meantime, today we passed historic farm legislation. We passed a very significant DOD authorization report. We passed a START II Treaty which the President requested in his State of the Union Message. We had all the work done before and we were just waiting for a vote.

We also passed the telecommunications bill, probably the biggest jobs bill in this decade. We have done all that plus public housing reform, which was very significant legislation.

So I do not want the RECORD to only reflect the statements I heard earlier from my friend from Ohio, Senator GLENN, and the Senator from Michigan, Senator LEVIN, that it has been sort of a waste of time. Because there will be no votes does not mean that there will not be hearings and progress, and I am certain my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will either be here working or be at home working. I think that from time to time it is good to go home and find out what the people are thinking.

It is not 3 weeks. It is about 2 weeks—10 days—10 days. So we will be back. In the interim, if there is anything that should be done, obviously we are going to be in here on this Friday, and next week there are pro forma sessions, and then we are in again for a couple hours each day and we can take care of any business that might come before the Senate.

So I want to thank all of my colleagues for their help and their cooperation so far this year. It is going to be a long year. There will be a lot of work to do, but I believe we can accomplish what we set out to do in the first place—welfare reform, balance the budget, regulatory reform, tax relief for families with children, all those things that are so necessary if we are going to get the economy moving again and if we are going to have that hope and optimism that the American people are looking for. So I thank the Presiding Officer.

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. DOLE. If there is no further business to come before the Senate, I move we stand in recess under the previous order following the remarks of Senator DASCHLE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess for 2 minutes.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 6:31 p.m., recessed until 6:34 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. ASHCROFT).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In my capacity as a Senator from the State of Missouri, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, in his capacity as a Senator from the State of Missouri, asks unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1996, AT 11 A.M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate now stands in recess until 11 a.m. on Friday, February 9.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 6:43 p.m., recessed until Friday, February 9, 1996, at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Friday, February 9, 1996

The House met at 11 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mrs. MORELLA].

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

With gratitude and praise, with awe and wonder, we offer our thanks for the opportunities of this day. In spite of all that should be done or must be accomplished and with all the anxieties of a busy world, we interrupt all our concerns to thank You, O gracious God, for the myriad blessings that You have freely given. The failures and the successes of yesterday are gone and tomorrow is not yet here, so in sincere appreciation we express these words of thanksgiving to You, our Creator and our God. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. MORELLA). The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House her approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. MONTGOMERY led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Lundregan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 1718. An act to designate the United States courthouse located at 197 South Main Street in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, as the "Max Rosenn United States Courthouse."

A message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 2196. An act to amend the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 with respect to inventions made under cooperative research and development agreements, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1510. An act to designate the United States Courthouse in Washington, District of Columbia, as the "E. Barrett Prettyman United States Courthouse", and for other purposes; and

S. 1518. An act to eliminate the Board of Tea Experts by prohibiting funding for the Board and by repealing the Tea Importation Act of 1897.

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS TO REPRESENT THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AT CEREMONIES FOR THE OBSERVANCE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order for the Speaker to appoint two Members of the House, one upon the recommendation of the minority leader, to represent the House of Representatives at appropriate ceremonies for the observance of George Washington's birthday to be held on Thursday, February 22, 1996.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the Chair appoints the following Members to represent the House of Representatives at appropriate ceremonies for the observance of George Washington's birthday to be held on Thursday, February 22, 1996: Mr. DAVIS of Virginia and Mr. MORAN of Virginia.

Anderson of Arlington, VA, to the Commission on Civil Rights for a 6-year term beginning on February 12, 1996. The current term expires on February 11, 1996.

CONGRATULATING HON. CONSTANCE MORELLA AS FIRST FEMALE MEMBER SWORN IN AS SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

(Mr. MONTGOMERY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Madam Speaker, congratulations on being the Speaker pro tempore. I believe you would probably be the first woman to have that position, and I congratulate you.

I had the privilege of acting as Speaker when Mr. Foley was Speaker, and I was sworn in by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN]; and as I understand it, the gentlewoman was sworn in by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DAVIS].

So congratulations. It is a nice honor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thanks her distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Mississippi, Congressman MONTGOMERY, for that accolade. It is a distinguished honor to do so and to follow in your footsteps, sir.

The gentleman mentioned that he was actually sworn in also in 1993, the last Speaker pro tempore to be sworn, prior to this Member the other night. So we are setting precedents, and it is an honor to serve with the gentleman in this House.

SENATE—Friday, February 9, 1996

(Legislative day of Wednesday, February 7, 1996)

The Senate met at 11 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

My door was opened wide
Then I looked around
If any lack of service might be found,
And sensed God at my side!
He entered, by what secret stair,
I know not, knowing only He was there.

Lord, You always have a secret stair. You come in ways we least expect. You are Lord of circumstances, people, and possibilities we would never imagine. When problems mount and we wonder how we are going to make it, then You give us a thought that turns out to be the key to unlock the solution to some difficulty. We stumble on an answer to a problem and we discover You had guided us at the fork in the road. You give us friends to help us. But the greatest evidence of Your intervention comes inside us. Suddenly in a spiritual dry spell, the wells of strength begin to fill up again. We are aware of fresh courage to replace our fear. We are gripped by a new perspective: the only thing that matters is that we belong to You and that You are in charge. Your secret stair has led to our hearts. You have not given up on us. You have plans for us. You will use everything that happens for Your glory and our growth, and a life full of surprises.

We thank You for the officers who give us security and protection. Today we affirm Officer Matthew Lutomski as he retires. We pray this in our Lord's name. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, today, there will be a period for morning business until the hour of 1 p.m. with the time equally divided between both sides of the aisle. No rollcall votes will occur during today's session. However, the Senate may consider any legislative items that may be cleared for action. As a reminder to all Senators, the next rollcall vote will occur at 2:15 on Tuesday, February 27. That vote will be on the motion to invoke cloture on the D.C. appropriations conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAMS). The Senator from Utah.

FEDERAL JUDGE APPOINTMENTS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, as you know, I do not take the floor very often unless I consider it very important.

One of the most lasting legacies of a President are the Federal judges he appoints for life. These judges are every bit as much a part of the Federal anticrime effort as FBI and DEA agents and prosecutors.

Mr. President, the American people are going to face stark choices on a range of issues in November. One of those choices will be whether we resume the appointment of hard-nosed Federal judges who are tougher on crime than we can expect from the incumbent.

President Clinton talks about cops on the beat. Yet, he appoints some judges who are too willing to put criminals back on the street.

Let me tell the American people about Timothy Sherman of Maryland. He was convicted in Maryland State court for the brutal shotgun murders of his mother and stepfather. The murder occurred in the middle of the night when Timothy Sherman, who was 17 at the time, was at home. There was no indication of forced entry. Indeed, the home had an alarm system. The 12-gauge shotgun used in the murder belonged to the Shermans. Timothy Sherman's fingerprints were on the shotgun's trigger mechanism. A box holding five 12-gauge shotgun shells was found under his mattress, with two of the shells missing. The police found two matching expended shells that experts concluded were fired from the shotgun. Police found the murder weapon in the branches of a large tree, where the younger Sherman had hidden objects before, and which is located between his own house and the house of his grandparents to which he ran to report the killings.

Sherman's conviction was upheld by Maryland courts and the U.S. Supreme Court denied certiorari. Sherman then sought to have his conviction overturned through a habeas corpus petition. Why? Because a trial juror had visited the crime scene, particularly the tree where the murder weapon was found. This was indeed improper. But criminal defendants are guaranteed a fair trial, not a perfect one. The trial judge found that the error was harmless and not prejudicial. The Federal district judge, William M. Nickerson, who heard the habeas claim, also found the error to be harmless, thereby upholding the conviction in a well reasoned opinion. Judge Nickerson is a Republican-appointed judge, appointed by President Bush. The prisoner appealed the denial of the writ of habeas corpus to the fourth circuit. A Carter judge, Francis Murnaghan, and a Clinton district court judge sitting by designation, James Beaty, reversed the Federal district court judge in a per curiam opinion. These two judges believed that the juror's visit had so prejudiced the proceedings as to invalidate the conviction and they granted Sherman the right to a new trial.

Judge J. Harvie Wilkinson dissented: "In light of all the evidence presented at trial, [the juror's] unauthorized excursion to the crime scene was harmless." Judge Wilkinson was appointed to the fourth circuit by President Reagan, over vigorous opposition by the other side of the aisle. Indeed, the other side of the aisle conducted a filibuster against this nominee at the time.

The two Republican appointed judges, then, would have rejected this convicted murderer's effort to overturn his conviction. The two Democratic-appointed judges have given him a new trial, which, if not undertaken within 6 months, will result in the prisoner's release.

Not to worry, say Judges Murnaghan and Beaty: "If the State of Maryland elects promptly to retry him, a jury, acting properly, may well again convict. It also may not, however, [convict him again] * * *," but, at least the second trial will meet their standard of justice, and at the taxpayers' expense.

Fortunately, the entire fourth circuit will rehear this case. Mr. President, who do you think the American people would prefer to rehear this criminal case: a majority of judges appointed by Presidents Carter and Clinton, or judges appointed by Presidents Reagan and Bush? I should point out that President Clinton wishes to promote Judge Beaty to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Let me turn to another recent, disturbing case. The New York Times of January 25, 1996, tells the story of Carol Bayless, who confessed to charges of possession of 75 pounds of cocaine and 4.4 pounds of heroin. She faced a minimum sentence of 10 years in jail and as much as life imprisonment.

According to the police officer's testimony, on April 21, 1995, he was patrolling in an unmarked car in plain clothes with his partner, both 10 year police veterans, in Washington Heights, an area he said was known as a hub for the drug trade. At about 5 a.m., he noticed Ms. Bayless' car, which had an out-of-State license plate, moving slowly down the street. She then double parked her car.

Four unidentified males then emerged from between parked cars and crossed the street in single file. Ms. Bayless popped open the car's trunk, and the men placed two large duffel bags in the trunk and closed it. The police officer did not observe any conversation between the males and the car's driver, and the entire episode took mere seconds. Ms. Bayless drove off and the police officer and his partner pulled up behind her at a stop light. As the two officers stared at the four men, two of the men noticed the police officers, spoke briefly to each other, and split up, rapidly moving in different directions, with at least one of the men running from the area.

Do my colleagues find these circumstances suspicious? The police officer did. He pulled Ms. Bayless over, searched the car, and found the nearly 80 pounds of illegal drugs.

But according to Judge Harold Baer, Jr., appointed by President Clinton, the police officer is out of step and out of line. Judge Baer ruled that the police officer violated the Constitution's ban on unreasonable searches. Why? According to Judge Baer, the police officer did not have reason to be suspicious of the four men and Ms. Bayless. Oh no. Instead, according to this bleeding heart judge, the four men had reason to be suspicious of the police officer.

Here is what the judge said: "Even before this prosecution * * * residents in this neighborhood tended to regard police officers as corrupt, abusive and violent * * * had the men not run when the cops began to stare at them, it would have been unusual."

Whose side is this judge on?

Understandably, "Ms. Bayless reacted with glee * * * over the ruling * * *" according to the New York Times. I am absolutely sure she did. As a practical matter, the judge's ruling, if it stands, lets her off the hook—free to run more dope into the veins of our people. Her lawyer called Judge Baer courageous. I would say he lacks common sense and judgment.

By the way, Ms. Bayless' 40-minute videotaped confession was also thrown out by Judge Baer because it resulted from the stopping of the car. In that confession, Ms. Bayless said she had made over 20 trips from Michigan to New York City to buy cocaine for her son and others beginning in 1991. Judge Baer found this drug runner's statement about what happened the morning of her arrest to be credible, and he rejected the police officer's testimony.

The President speaks about cops on the beat. This police officer was on the beat. He was risking his life on behalf of decent, law abiding citizens in Washington Heights and for all of us. He made a good arrest. He took nearly 80 pounds of deadly dope off the street, worth—well, it is incalculable how much that 80 pounds is worth.

But what is the use of cops on the beat if the President appoints soft-headed judges who let the criminals they catch back on the street? It just seems a waste of taxpayers' money. We might as well just let them do whatever they want to do. At least that is the conclusion one would draw from what Judge Baer did in this case.

I, for one, hope the U.S. attorney in this area appeals this decision, and I am going to be burned up if he does not.

In 1994, by a vote of 61 to 37, the Senate confirmed a Florida State judge, Rosemary Barkett, for the eleventh circuit, that no Republican would have appointed to the Federal bench.

Time and again, Judge Barkett, as a State judge, erroneously came down on the side of lawbreakers and against police officers and law enforcement. The full record of my concerns is set forth in the March 22, 1994, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. But I cannot refrain from reminding my colleagues of one shocking and outrageous dissent she joined in a brutal murder case, in which she would have reduced a vicious killer's death penalty to life imprisonment, with eligibility for parole in 25 years.

Dougan versus Florida involved a terrible, racially motivated murder. The killer bragged about the murder in tape recordings which he mailed to the victim's mother. The dissent which Judge Barkett joined had the gall to say, in part:

> This case is not simply a homicide case, it is also a social awareness case. Wrongly, but rightly in the eyes of Dougan, this killing was effectuated to focus attention on a chronic and pervasive illness of racial discrimination and of hurt, sorrow, and rejection. Throughout Dougan's life his resentment to bias and prejudice festered. His impatience for change, for understanding, for reconciliation matured to taking the illogical and drastic action of murder. His frustration, his anger, and his obsession of injustice overcame reason. The victim was a symbolic representation of the class causing the perceived injustices.

This opinion reeks of moral relativism and excuse-making that is totally unacceptable in a judge. And this opinion, which she joined, is just the tip of the iceberg regarding Judge Barkett's very liberal record as a State judge. Yet, President Clinton found her record to be within his mainstream and promoted her to an important judgeship.

Why is this so important? Why am I raising cain here today? As a practical matter, the Senate gives—and certainly I give—every President deference in confirming judicial candidates nominated by the President. A Republican President would not nominate the same judges that a Democrat would, and vice versa. Although the Senate has a constitutional duty to advise and consent to the nominees, the Senate, as a practical matter, gives the President leeway. The President has been elected by the whole country and, while this President has been unable to put all of his choices on the bench, he has filled many judgeships, as have his predecessors. We on the Judiciary Committee have gone along with him because we want to give this President deference. He did win the election. But let us not miss the point of this. We have to be concerned about what kind of judges this President is going to appoint.

I respectfully submit, therefore, that the American people must bear in mind that when they elect a President, they get his judges too—and not just for 4 years, but for life.

And, while the Senate has served as a check on the President, there is no substitute for holding, and exercising, the power to nominate Federal judges.

Indicia of judicial activism or a soft-on-crime outlook are not always present in a nominee's record. Not every nominee who turns out to be a judicial activist or soft on crime can be ferreted out in the confirmation process. Indeed, as I mentioned earlier, every President is able to obtain confirmation of most of his nominees.

The general judicial philosophy of nominees to the Federal bench reflects the general judicial philosophy of the person occupying the White House—the Oval office, if you will. And differences in judicial philosophy have real consequences for the safety of Americans in their streets, homes, and workplaces.

I want to say that I believe the next President of the United States, whether it be President Clinton or whoever, is probably going to have the opportunity to nominate at least two Supreme Court Justices, maybe three. If President Clinton is reelected, he will have appointed better than 50 percent of the total Federal judiciary. It is something we all have to think about. I decry these kind of decisions made by the Clinton judges that I have named so far, and Carter judges—one.

I believe you could probably point out deficiencies in judges of every President. But I am really concerned, in this day of rampant criminal activity, with the flood of drugs into our society, that we have judges who are being appointed on a daily basis who have a philosophy like Judge Barkett's, who do not blame the acts of these criminals on themselves but blame them on society, blame them on their environment, on anything but their own volition and their own desire to do wrong.

I believe there are wrongs in our society. I believe that there are injustices. I believe that there is still discrimination in our society against certain people. I believe these things are wrong.

On the other hand, when people who are not insane commit heinous murders and heinous crimes and are spreading drugs among our young people and are destroying the youth of this Nation and doing it with full intent to do so and to profit from their decisions, or because they are murderers, then I think we ought to come down pretty doggone hard on them; that is, if we want to have a civil, humane, free, and fair society.

I will have more to say about these judges in the future, but I have become so alarmed about some of these decisions that I just felt I had to come to the floor today and make this point, since we on the Judiciary Committee have this very important honor of working with these judges. I do not think anybody can say that I have not done my very best to try to accommodate this administration, to try to help them in the appointment of judges. I am going to continue to do that as long as I can. I want to be fair to this President.

On the other hand, these type of judges are giving me the chills, and I think they are giving the American people the chills as well. We have to consider just who we want appointing these judges in the future.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

FINISH WORK BEFORE WE RECESS

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I am glad to see there are a few of us left in Washington this morning: The Presiding Officer, Senator HATCH from Utah, myself—maybe there are a few other Senators around Capitol Hill, but there are not very many. It is that situation I wish to address briefly this morning.

I do not come to the floor very often and give lengthy speeches. This will not be a very lengthy speech this morning either, but sometimes I think a sense of responsibility on how the Senate conducts its business or does not conduct its business is in order. It is that issue I want to address this morning.

Mr. President, the Senate conducted rollcall votes on Wednesday. And although we are not technically in recess, there are no plans to have votes until February 27. No vote of the Senate was taken to decide whether we would recess. It was just decided we would go through the charade of pro forma sessions, of looking like we are doing something when actually we are not. I think it is important for the American people to know about what is going on here, because we have not passed all the appropriations bills for the fiscal year that started last October.

We are 5 months into this fiscal year without having dealt with the unfinished business of the Senate.

Currently the following departments are operating without regular appropriations bills. The Department of Veterans Affairs; the Department of Housing and Urban Development; the Environmental Protection Agency, the Department of Commerce, the Department of State, the Department of Justice, the Department of the Interior, the Department of Labor, and the Department of Health and Human Services.

We passed a continuing resolution. That is what we call it. A continuing resolution means you are supposed to go ahead and continue your operations as they were in the previous year if we have not passed an appropriations bill. But this year there is a new angle to this because in order to get a continuing resolution passed on most of these departments, most of what we would normally have had as a continuing resolution is not there because we have reduced most of them by 25 percent over what their expenditure limits would have been. In other words, most of them are having to limp along and make reductions in their activities.

I want to spell some of these out in a few minutes. But let me just say that five appropriations bills remain unfinished, and funding for the District of Columbia is not complete. We have yet to agree on a plan to balance the budget over the next 7 years.

We do not have a welfare reform bill, nor Medicare reform, nor Medicaid reform, nor health insurance reform, nor product liability reform, nor Superfund reform, nor an Endangered Species Act, nor a Safe Drinking Water Act, nor a Clean Water Act, and we even face defaulting on the debt endangering the full faith and credit of the United States come March 15 if we have not acted. And, incidentally, all of these CR's also run out. So there would be no funding for these agencies or departments come March 15 unless we take action of the full Congress to correct it.

All of the above is what we were supposed to be doing back in the 1995 calendar year that would apply to fiscal 1996 which we are in right now and have been since last October. We have not even started yet on the 1996 agenda that will be for next year's budget. So we are completely behind.

This lack of achievement will not stand in the way, however, of a 20-day break in the Senate schedule. I know that recesses are scheduled during a legislative session. But I want to call the attention of the Senate and the attention of the people of this country to the fact that this election year the Senate schedule is already curtailed, and we are well behind even on this year's activity.

Mr. President, by my count, if we assume an Easter recess, a Memorial Day recess, a Fourth of July recess, an August recess for the party nominating conventions, and an October 4 sine die adjournment—and a not unusual Senate 4-day workweek. The norm here is that nothing of substance usually happens Monday morning and there is nothing of substance normally on Friday afternoon. There are only about 88 legislative days left in this 104th Congress this year to accomplish the business of last year as well as the business of this year.

It is probably more like 70 to 75 days when we know the actual number of days when Members are here in numbers to conduct business. Sometimes we put things off from one day to another because certain people are not here, or their schedule has been accommodated by leadership on both sides of the aisle. But I think even an optimistic count, if you look at the calendar, is that we will have about 88 days left this year. That may come as a shock to a lot of people because they think we are here in mid-February and we have all the rest of this year to get our job done. We do not. Of the legislative days here, we have about 88 days left for this year right now. I do not see how we accommodate our business that has to be done in that time period.

Let me point out some of the problems that the Nation faces and we avoid by not being here doing our work. I requested that some of the affected agencies tell me how they are dealing with these cutbacks right now. This is not something speculative out there into the future. We can surmise as to what may be out there in the future. But here are a few things that are being curtailed right now, services that the people of this country thought they were getting and are beginning to be cut back on. Why? Because we have not passed the appropriations bills, and because we accommodated the demands of mainly the people over in the House that said that if they were going to even make a continuing resolution it had to be with major cutbacks in fundings now. In other words, they are doing what should be legislative cutbacks by just saying we will not provide the money, and we just refuse. So for most of these agencies or departments some of them are going along on about a 25-percent reduction.

Let us look at the Environmental Protection Agency. According to the EPA, 40 percent of its planned inspections of industrial facilities were missed during this period—40 percent. EPA typically conducts 9,000 inspections a year and takes 3,700 enforcement actions. These inspections help protect our drinking water and our air quality. Continued funding shortfalls will not allow EPA to catch up with its backlog. The work necessary to develop tap water standards for pollutants like cryptosporidium will be delayed. A couple of years ago, in 1993, 100 people died and many more were sickened by cryptosporidium. Even though this is a priority issue, these standards take time. And this is a complex issue requiring extensive data collection which is being delayed right now.

Toxic waste cleanups are being slowed. Cleanups at hundreds of sites were stopped during the shutdown, and half of those will not be able to resume quickly. Further funding shortages will only cause further delay. Three new cleanups in Ohio, my home State, at Uniontown, Dayton, and Marietta may not begin this year. It looks as though they will not begin this year as scheduled.

Further delays are expected in efforts to control industrial discharge into rivers and streams. The public's right to know about toxic chemical emissions in their area is jeopardized. Delays in pesticide registration will affect crop protection. Standards for controlling toxic industrial air pollutants will be delayed.

A toxic sweep task force was established by Cleveland and the State of Ohio to rid the city of toxic problems that pose threats to the public health and welfare, fire safety, and serve as barriers to property redevelopment. Twenty-seven properties have been cleaned up under this program. EPA help was requested on three of the more difficult sites. However, EPA cannot respond, and redevelopment is delayed and may not occur at all.

Those are just a few of the things that are going on just with the EPA budget because of this failure of the Congress to act.

Under Health and Human Services, although many critical programs received full-year funding, the level of funding is not keeping up with the increased need due to our growing elderly population, and especially the old and frail elderly who need health and support services in order to just stay in their homes and their communities.

The Health Resources and Services Administration supports programs such as community and migrant health centers, and maternal and child health block grants. The impact of interrupted and short-term funding is expected to result in reduced services to the poor, and will be detrimental to the health services infrastructure and the quality of services, including preventive services.

Because final action has not occurred, uncertainty exists as to the availability of funding for Ryan White CARE Act programs. This inability to predict the annual level of funding available to cities and States will impact planning and operating systems for HIV/AIDS victims. The cities of Cleveland, Fort Worth, Hartford, Minneapolis, Sacramento, and San Jose now qualify for title I—HIV Emergency Relief Grant Program to provide emergency assistance to localities disproportionately affected by the HIV epidemic—funds under both existing and proposed legislation because of the ever-growing need of HIV/AIDS services. Awards to all new cities must be delayed until there is permanent legislation.

Under education—Mr. President, the largest investment we make to boost low achievement in educational skills is title I which provides some 50,000 schools and about two-thirds of our elementary schools across this country, with funds for individualized instruction, smaller classes, extra time to learn after school, use of computers, and more parental involvement. According to Secretary Riley, at continuing resolution levels title I will be cut by $1.1 billion, or 17 percent. This will deny help to more than 1 million students and cost 40,000 to 50,000 teaching and teaching aides' positions. As an example, Chicago could lose some 600 teachers. In Beaver Local School District of Lisbon in northeastern Ohio, that means the elimination of the program for the middle school, losing three teachers, and ending remedial reading and math for 120 children. Ohio could lose over $50 million.

That is just an example in my home State. But the same thing is going on all over this country—cutbacks in education and helping kids get a decent start in school, giving them remedial help that they need is being cut back right now.

The Department of Labor is operating at funding levels provided in the House-passed bill. Should this continue, summer jobs for youth will be eliminated wiping out Federal support for summer jobs for 600,000 young people—600,000 young people, if we continue to do nothing the way we have been doing, will not have summer jobs.

Employment and training programs would be reduced by $1.6 billion, meaning 800,000 other people would be deprived of much needed services. Back to Ohio again. Ohio would receive $35 million less for job training and assistance with 30,000 people unserved that normally would have been helped during that period.

Veterans. Congress' failure to deliver an acceptable VA-HUD appropriations bill is having a devastating effect on veterans programs. Veterans medical care is compromised by the requirement to eliminate 5,100 full-time medical employees at VA facilities. This will result in treatment of 36,000 fewer inpatients and 800,000 outpatients. This is the equivalent of closing three medical clinics with an average of 300 beds each. How can we possibly justify that? In addition, funding levels under the current CR preclude construction of two hospitals that are needed at Travis Air Force Base in Fairfield, CA, and Brevard County in Florida. It also eliminates funding for five projects required to renovate and correct major deficiencies in older VA hospitals.

How can we possibly look any veterans that are in those hospitals, who sacrificed in combat or wherever, however they came to be in the hospital, in the eye and say, "Well, you are not in a war so we are going to cut you fellows out; we are going to cut the funding back, shut the facilities down." I find that very hard to accept.

The Justice Department. Under the current continuing resolution, the Community Oriented Policing Services, so-called COPS Program, is funded at 75 percent of its 1995 levels. At this level, 1,674 additional police officers could be hired. Under the President's request, 3,166 could be added. This means there are 1,492 fewer cops out there on the beat.

Mr. President, I went up and visited one of the COPS programs in Toledo, OH, not too long ago. It is working very well. They have the additional police out in the community organizing the people to have community watch programs and cooperative programs. It is working very, very well. But those programs are now going to be reduced or eliminated or new ones will certainly not be started.

The Department of Commerce. In the Department of Commerce, a variety of programs have been affected by delays which have impacted fishing communities, delayed NOAA's satellite procurement program, threatened funding of National Weather Service contractors and suppliers, disrupted orderly trade relations which hinders exporters, threatened Economic Development Administration assistance to local governments and businesses following military base closures. Review and processing of applications for new State coastal zone management programs in Ohio and Texas and Georgia have delayed eligibility for Federal funding of $2 million a year.

Mr. President, these are just a few examples of the consequences of our inaction. Beyond the terrific impact of these shortfalls is the question of how can we expect to operate a system of government in the most efficient way possible while supporting it in only bits and pieces—starts and stops. No organization can operate effectively when run on that kind of an interim basis. Planning is hindered when you are funded for the next 6 weeks and uncertain about another, and whether or not there will be a 10th continuing resolution. We do not even know that. We do not know what the conditions of acceptance of another CR will be. The CR permitting the action I am talking about here this morning expires on March 15 along with the debt limit.

You can be certain that efficiency of Government services will be questioned when it comes to next year's funding but Congress will not likely blame itself. Federal workers become an all-too-easy target.

Mr. President, yesterday's Washington Post says, and I quote, "Congress has gone home to campaign. Given the little they have accomplished to date, you wonder what the members will campaign on, but resourceful troopers that they are, they will no doubt find something."

After a discussion of the farm bill, the Post suggests that Congress, "Can go on to the rest of their unfinished business, like raising the debt ceiling so the Treasury doesn't have to default, finishing this year's budget so they can get on to the next and figuring out what if anything they want to do about Medicare, Medicaid, welfare, the Clean Water Act and a couple of other trifles like that."

"Trifles" I am sure they meant tongue in cheek.

Another clip out of the newspaper, Kevin Phillips noted in his column of February 7 in the Los Angeles Times, "The 104th Congress may be the worst in 50 years."

The forces of an ideological jihad have failed to find workable compromise on their agenda and have forgotten that democracy depends on compromise. Failing to move a radical agenda to turn back America's clock, an effort to shut down the executive branch of the Government also failed. Now it appears we are applying the same tactics to the legislative branch of Government.

Mr. President, not doing business is no way for the Congress to do business. One of the few successes of last year was requiring Congress to abide by the same laws as everyone else. I believe we are violating at least the spirit of that law when we hold Government employees hostage, when we borrow from the pension funds to keep the Government afloat, when we drive the Government to the brink of default, when we do not complete the job we were hired to do in the time we were supposed to do it, when we force the agencies and departments of Government to operate on an interim basis facing imminent cutoffs of funds and in a final note of folly when all else fails the Congress leaves town with very limited legislative time left in this calendar year of 1996.

Mr. President, maybe we should require that Congress abide by another law that people in all of our communities have to work with also, and that is no work, no pay. We had votes on that. They did not pass. Maybe we ought to reconsider that when we get back in here.

Meanwhile, Mr. President, everyone is out campaigning, doing whatever they are doing while the work of the Government sits here and is not being accomplished. We were elected to come here and deal with the problems and the programs of this country. We have not even dealt with the work we were supposed to do last year, and we certainly have not gotten around to completing that or even beginning the work we are supposed to do this year and time is very, very short.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorial out of yesterday's Washington Post and also the column by Kevin Phillips out of the Los Angeles Times of Wednesday, February 7 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RECESS

Congress has gone home to campaign. Given the little they have accomplished to date, you wonder what the members will campaign on, but resourceful troopers that they are, they'll no doubt find something. The Senate was the last to leave; first it passed a farm bill. That would be fine; it's not a bad bill. But the House hasn't acted yet and isn't scheduled to return until the end of the month, the administration claims to have serious reservations about the bill in its present form, and farmers and their bankers would like to know before planting season starts what the rules are going to be for the year ahead.

That's one of the factors that impelled the Senate to act. Next week's Iowa caucuses may have been the other, Iowa being a leading farm state. Neither Majority Leader Bob Dole nor Agriculture Committee Chairman Richard Lugar wanted to enter the caucuses empty-handed. Now they have at least a provisional bill to discuss.

The farm programs are outmoded. Mr. Lugar was one who pointed that out early on last year, an unusual act for a farm state Republican and presidential candidate who had just assumed the chairmanship. The programs are both costly and inefficient. Most of the money goes to the largest producers least in need, and to the extent that farmers produce for the government rather than the market, the system induces an inefficient use of resources. There does need to be a safety net to protect consumers and producers alike against huge swings in the markets. But the guarantees are set too high. To protect itself, the government then seeks to prop up market prices in part by limiting production and in the process costs the country sales and market share abroad. The payments are also geared too much to production and not enough to conservation.

The Republicans proposed a reform—to break the tie between production and payments, ratchet the payments down over the next seven years to save money while leaving farmers free to produce what they choose and appoint a commission to help determine what kind of successor programs the country should have. Ranking Agriculture Committee Democrat Patrick Leahy insisted on adding amendments reauthorizing the food stamp and other feeding programs, in part to give them some parliamentary protection, and broadening the principal conservation program to cover more than soil erosion in the Plains states. More money could be used to prevent agricultural runoff and improve water quality elsewhere in the country, for example.

All that's to the good. In the House, however, Republicans who could otherwise pass a similar bill over Democratic objections are divided. Some rightly want a chance to amend the sugar and peanut programs, both of which jack up prices unnecessarily at the checkout counter but which were preserved to buy committee votes for the broader bill. The administration meanwhile wants to change the broader bill, which the president has already vetoed once; it was a relatively minor part of the GOP proposal to balance the budget that the rejected last year. Mr. Clinton's basic, unhelpful position is that the farm programs don't need to be changed much at all.

And then, when they get the farm problem settled, they can go on to the rest of their unfinished business, like raising the debt ceiling so the Treasury doesn't have to default, finishing this year's budget so they can get on to the next and figuring out what if anything they want to do about Medicare, Medicaid, welfare, the Clean Water Act and a couple of other trifles like that.

CONSIDER THIS CONGRESS THE WORST IN A HALF-CENTURY

(By Kevin Phillips)

WASHINGTON.—The 104th Congress may be the worst in 50 years.

It has another 10 months before it nails down top (bottom?) honors. And it will, of course, face tough competition from four other eminently second-rate Congresses—the 80th, 89th, 101st and 103rd. Even so, it's time for the national debate to start, because what Americans decide to do about Congress will color what kind of president they'll want to pick—or settle for—in November.

Believers in the Washington system—once described as dropping coins into the elephants' and donkeys' mouths and getting laws and regulations out the other end—were cheered in early 1995 by the apparent renewal of tired political parties and government mechanisms represented by ultrapowerful new House Speaker Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.) and his bold agenda of national change.

A year later, two-thirds of the "contract with America" is sitting in the Senate's dumpster or crumbled in the president's veto basket; Congress' ratings are back to autumn 1994 contempt levels, and Gingrich has set records for first-year credibility loss by a new speaker. The notion of a "reform" GOP Congress is now right up there with Tinkerbell and the Tooth Fairy; and Washington lobbyists are wondering how they will ever collect on the regulatory breaks and tax loopholes they thought they'd bought at the Grand Old Auction Party last winter.

Recent national surveys have shown voters saying President Bill Clinton should be reelected to block the unpopular Congress. But other new polls show the electorate is starting to tilt Democratic for the House, as well. So November is emerging as a dilemma-cum-challenge: Would dumping the House GOP and eliminating Gingrich as speaker make it safe to also oust Clinton as president—especially if his family and staff start setting records for time spent before grand juries? Clinton's great success with his State of the Union speech isn't likely to repeat itself if he has to make a State of Family Integrity follow-up.

But Clinton's foibles have already been debated in two elections—1992 and 1994. It is the failures of the GOP Congress that might well be the focus of 1996.

Take the "contract with America." This started out as a smart campaign ploy, but

GOP strategists let its dozen or so promises—from budget balance to a line-item veto—become the be-all and end-all of Republican congressional achievement. A few good ideas—congressional accountability and prohibition of unfunded federal mandates being imposed on the states, for example—made it across Clinton's desk and into the statute books; but other popular themes (term limits) bogged down, and some ideas, such as tort reform and environmental overhaul, lost favor as the involvement of lobbyists became all too evident.

The collapse of public support was stunning. Polls by the Times-Mirror Center found that, in winter 1994–95, voters approved congressional GOP policies by 52%–28%; but, by January 1996, they disapproved, 54%–36%. The NBC News poll found virtually the same shift. Respondents had agreed with the GOP policies, 49%–22%, in January 1995; by January 1996, disagreement prevailed, 48%–34%. This is the sharpest slump in policy-approval ever measured for a new Congress.

The crown jewel of the contract—huge tax cuts tilted toward business and the wealthy combined with the seven-year zero budget-deficit blueprint—was especially flawed and, worse still, a practical contradiction. The tax cuts proved a zero-deficit program over seven years wasn't even a good idea. In 1994, all the European Union nations, except Luxembourg, had larger deficits than the United States. Ours was 2% of gross domestic product, theirs ranged from 2.1% of GDP in Ireland and 2.6% in Germany to a whopping 11.4% in Greece. These countries, too, face high health and pension costs, as well as job weakness; and the requirement that EU members get deficits down to 3% is feared in much of Western Europe as a recession prescription. The GOP's zero-deficit prescription for America would have been even more Hooveresque.

Meanwhile, the 104th Congress has emerged as a beacon light of hypocrisy when it comes to institutional reform and money in politics. The promise of term limits was quickly scuttled, and new GOP leaders, especially in the House, have used the same kind of closed-door legislative tactics they attacked under the Democrats. The vaunted lobbying "reforms" passed this winter turn out to have something else—a downshift from criminal penalties to civil penalties to civil penalties with the usual game of widening as many escape hatches as are closed. Discussing the loopholes in the new gift ban, the president of the American League of Lobbyists remarked, "I would prefer to call them pathways or, in some cases, interstates."

As for campaign finance, serious reform has already been mocked and foreclosed. Congress' new GOP leaders have collected bigger campaign contributions, from more special interests, than any previous set of first-termers.

The final mega-problem is the "extreming" of Congress since the 1994 election. Not only has the ideology been radical, but, on the House side, Gingrich and the 74 House GOP freshmen are becoming twin symbols of political excess. Recent polls on Gingrich give him only a 26%–34% approval rating, while 55%–58% disapprove. No new speaker has ever dropped so far so fast.

The right-leaning freshmen are in just as much trouble. One January poll found 70% of Americans disapproved of the freshmen's willingness to shut down government in the budget debate, with 45% calling the freshmen "ideological extremists who are holding the federal government hostage."

The "extreming" of Congress has even spread to the hitherto centrist Senate. The rightward lurch of Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole (R-Kan.) signaled this shift, and the retirement announcements of five GOP moderates make a sharper swing to the right inevitable after they're gone. The new Senate GOP of 1997 will be far more like the current House GOP—not exactly an endorsement for keeping the Republicans in control.

Other Congresses that compete for the "worst in 50 years" title are the 80th (1947–48), the 89th (1965–66), the 101st (1989–90) and the 103rd (1993–94). The 103rd was the Democratic Congress that voters voted out in 1994, angry at its mix of petty scandals and ineffectiveness. Its biggest failure was that the Democrats were stale and deserved the boot after 40 years of unbroken control in the House.

The 101st Congress featured the forced resignations of Democratic Speaker Jim Wright and Majority Whip Tony Coelho. The 89th was the lopsidedly Democratic Congress that ran amok with the liberal legislation and overambition of the 1960s. The 80th was the last GOP Congress to face a Democratic president. It also went too far on economic, education and social welfare issues.

However, because the 104th has ideological radicalism, yet another speaker facing an ethics investigation and a record collapse of public esteem, it could turn out to be the wustest that got there the fastest—to paraphrase the famous confederate cavalry leader.

Is there a remedy? Not necessarily. Though defeating enough Republicans in the House to depose Gingrich as speaker could be a start. Giving the Democrats a narrow majority back won't empower them to do much more than squelch GOP excess. But in the long haul, it will probably be necessary to find some way of promoting a mix of third parties, campaign reform aimed at helping independent congressional candidates (just proposed by retiring Sen. Bill Bradley (D-N.J.)) and other changes designed to break the nexus between money and politics.

After all, if Americans do start deciding that the 104th Congress is the worst in memory—or even first runner-up—then it could be time for voters to demand a far different set of arrangements and reforms. In Congress, as well as in presidential elections, the two-party system, with its false promises and special-interest masters, has arguably become part of the problem, not part of the solution.

THE BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, at the close of business yesterday, Thursday, February 8, the Federal debt stood at $4,988,549,905,457.27, about $12 billion shy of the $5 trillion mark, which the Federal debt will exceed in a few months.

On a per capita basis, every man, woman, and child in America owes $18,934.97 as his or her share of that debt.

RELEASE OF FBI REPORT ON FUTURE WIRETAP CAPACITY NEEDS

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, we took an important step in the last Congress to preserve law enforcement's wiretapping tool and increase privacy protection for our telephone and computer communications by passing the Communications Assistance for Law Enforcement Act. This law expanded privacy protection to cordless telephones, restricted the ability of law enforcement to obtain transactional information from e-mail messages, and improved the privacy of mobile phones by expanding criminal penalties for stealing the service from legitimate users.

This new law also imposed new requirements to ensure that court orders for electronic surveillance can be carried out, rather than stymied by new technologies used on our telephone networks.

Significantly, these new requirements for our Nation's telephone networks were accompanied by guidelines designed to bring public oversight and accountability to the process of implementing them. For the first time, decisions on how new and existing telecommunications systems will remain accessible to government surveillance must be made in the sunshine of public scrutiny.

Thus, the new law requires for the first time that law enforcement's demands regarding the number of wiretap, pen register, and other surveillance orders that telephone companies must be able to service simultaneously, are published in the Federal Register and scrutinized in a public procedure.

In compliance with this new requirement, the FBI published in the Federal Register on October 16, 1995, a proposed notice setting forth its capacity demands. According to the proposed notice, these capacity demands were predicated upon a historical baseline of electronic surveillance activity and an analysis of that activity. Yet, the Federal Register notice did not include publication of this underlying information.

Shortly after the notice was issued, I wrote to the FBI Director requesting copies of this information, and urging him to release the information to the public to ensure the fullest dissemination of the information.

I am aware that the comments filed by the deadline on January 16, 1996, in response to the proposed notice on behalf of civil liberties groups, telephone companies, and cellular companies have criticized the proposed notice for failing to disclose the supporting data for the capacity demands. As one set of comments filed by the Center for Democracy and Technology and the Center for National Security Studies noted, "it is impossible to say whether or not the capacity requirements proposed in the notice are justified" without the supporting data.

The FBI has now provided me with a 13-page report explaining how they collected information about past law enforcement surveillance activity from Federal and State court offices, State attorneys general offices, and over a thousand telecommunications carriers.

This report also describes the method the FBI used to analyze this information and figure out how much wiretap capacity law enforcement would need for the foreseeable future and up to 10 years from now in three broad categories of geographic areas.

I fully appreciate the amount of hard work that went into collecting this critical data and doing the analysis. Indeed, this is the first time that law enforcement has ever been required to estimate its future surveillance activity and the demands that will be made on telecommunications carriers. This is also the first time that this information has ever been required to be made public.

I am pleased to make this report available for public dissemination. It does not identify which geographic areas fall into which of the three different categories with differing capacity requirements. Thus, it does not tell us whether Vermont is in category I, where the greatest level of interception activity has occurred and is likely to occur in the future, or in category III, where the number of law enforcement wiretaps have been low or nonexistent. Telecommunications carriers doing business in Vermont and Vermonters will want to know which category we fall into.

The FBI has assured me that they are in the process of preparing two additional documents that will explain the proposed capacity notice in greater depth. I look forward to examining those two additional documents upon their release by the FBI.

The public process set up in the new law is working. I commend the FBI Director for his efforts to fulfill the public accountability provisions of the law by making available this report and future reports on the capacity requirements.

Since these reports were not available prior to the deadline for comments on the original proposed notice, however, I would urge the FBI to consider issuing a revised or supplemental proposed notice to give interested parties an opportunity to comment on the proposed capacity demands with the benefit of this new information.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INFORMATION CONCERNING IMPLEMENTATION OF THE COMMUNICATIONS ASSISTANCE FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT [CALEA]

BACKGROUND

CALEA was enacted to preserve law enforcement's ability, pursuant to court order or other lawful authorization, to access communications (content) and associated call-identifying information in an ever-changing telecommunications environment. Because many interceptions[1] in the future will be initiated through equipment controlled by carriers, CALEA obligates the Attorney General to provide telecommunications carriers with information they will need (a) to adequately size and design their networks to accommodate the maximum number of simultaneous interceptions that law enforcement potentially might conduct after October 25, 1998, and (b) to be capable of accommodating the actual number of simultaneous interceptions law enforcement potentially might conduct as of October 25, 1998. The CALEA specifically refers to two levels of capacity, maximum and actual.

CALEA requires the Attorney General to provide a notice of the maximum capacity required to accommodate all of the communication interceptions, pen registers, and trap trace devices that the Attorney General estimates that government agencies authorized to conduct electronic surveillance may conduct and use simultaneously after the date that is 4 years after enactment (i.e., after October 25, 1998). The Attorney General must also provide a notice of the actual number of communication interceptions, pen registers, and trap trace devices, representing a portion of the maximum capacity, that the Attorney General estimates that government agencies authorized to conduct electronic surveillance may conduct and use simultaneously as of October 1998.[2]

MAXIMUM CAPACITY

Unlike actual capacity, CALEA indicates that the maximum capacity applies to a time, not specified, after the date that is 4 years after the date of CALEA's enactment. The maximum capacity has been interpreted as chiefly a design requirement for telecommunications carriers that will be utilized to size and define an upper bound capacity ceiling for the mid-term to intermediate future (i.e., 1998–2004), as discussed in more detail below. This ceiling is intended to provide carriers with certainty and stability, as well as with a framework for cost effectively designing and engineering future capacity requirements into their networks.

As CALEA makes clear, the maximum capacity is in no way synonymous with actual capacity (i.e., the interception capacity that law enforcement may actually use as of October 25, 1998). Rather, maximum capacity is viewed as relating to a longer term, more enduring design requirement that would serve as a defined technological bound to interception activity, but yet would provide room for expeditiously accommodating certain future interception-related "worst case scenarios." For example, it would be impossible for law enforcement to predict unusual, anomalous, but nonetheless very serious or violent events such as those associated with certain acts of terrorism or extreme instances of drug-trafficking or organized crime activity. Maximum capacity provides a safety-net that would enable telecommunications carriers to expeditiously respond to serious, unpredictable, emergencies that require very unusual levels of interception capacity.

ACTUAL CAPACITY

Under CALEA, estimates of actual capacity are to apply to all simultaneous interception activity that may be conducted by the date that is 4 years after the date of enactment of CALEA. CALEA makes clear that actual capacity represents only a portion of the maximum capacity. Actual capacity thus pertains to the amount of interception activity that potentially may be needed when many of CALEA's requirements are scheduled to take effect in October 1998. Consequently, when viewing the maximum and actual capacity levels set forth in the Initial Capacity Notice, realistically only the actual capacity estimates should be construed as in any way reflecting the amount of simultaneous interception activity that potentially may be conducted by law enforcement in any geographic area as of October 1998.

METHODOLOGY OVERVIEW

The CALEA mandate which obligates the Attorney General to estimate future capacity marks the first time (a) that information has been required to be provided to carriers in order for them to properly design and size future networks with reference to interception activity; and (b) that the entire law enforcement community has been required to project its collective potential future interception needs, thereby in effect placing possible technological limitations on its lawful authority to conduct electronic surveillance. This circumstance, as viewed by the law enforcement community, obviously generates great and legitimate concern, because historically telephone technology placed no constraints on law enforcement's court ordered electronic surveillance authority. If not implemented with care, CALEA could have the unintended effect of potentially placing restrictions on the lawful use of electronic surveillance authority. Thus, if law enforcement errs by underscoping its potential, legitimate, and lawful interception needs, effective law enforcement will be hampered and, more importantly, the public safety will be jeopardized.

The FBI, which is implementing many of the responsibilities conferred upon the Attorney General by CALEA, was required to issue the capacity notice. In order to meet this obligation, we proceeded by employing a rigorous, comprehensive methodology to acquire critically needed information and to establish analytic tools for determining the simultaneous interception activity of the recent past and for estimating future maximum and actual capacity.

The methodology used was intended to take into consideration the concerns of the parties principally affected by CALEA. On the one hand, CALEA provides law enforcement with an opportunity and means to ensure that its future electronic surveillance needs can be met. On the other hand, CALEA presents an opportunity and means for telecommunications carriers to understand the nature and extent of their obligations to accommodate law enforcement's electronic surveillance needs and to do so in a way that will not be unduly burdensome or excessive. Law enforcement's approach and perspective regarding its electronic surveillance needs relate to its mission to combat serious crime, acts of terrorism, and acts of violence. Traditionally, this mission has been tied to law enforcement agencies' geographically-based jurisdiction and associated jurisdictional legal authority. Telecommunications carriers' approach and perspective regarding law enforcement's electronic surveillance needs, however, chiefly relate to the effect such needs may have on particular components within their systems that are used to serve subscribers within a given market (i.e., switches and other network components).

As a goal, law enforcement sought to harmonize the different approaches and perspectives of these parties in its methodology. The methodology sought to produce a result that acknowledged and factored in the interrelationship between the geographic, jurisdictional contours of law enforcement interception activity and the geographic service areas covered by the carrier switching facilities that will be likely used to provide interception access. By identifying key pieces of data associated with these approaches and perspectives, we were able to formulate and then analyze past interception activity in terms that enabled us to establish one of the key components (one pertaining to past peak levels of interception activity in localities of various sizes) in an equation leading to an estimate of future interception capacity. The other key component (one pertaining to projected growth) was derived from a statistical model that included a number of variables reasonably believed to predict potential future capacity bounds and potential future interception needs. Once the projections were made to estimate future capacity needs, the results were reviewed and adjusted to ensure reasonableness before publishing the results in the Initial Capacity Notice.

By presenting capacity levels in the Initial Capacity Notice with reference to engineered capacity (discussed below), the FBI intended to express interception capacity in an understandable fashion as a percentage of a carrier's switch or other network component capacity. This approach was intended to enable carriers to tailor their technological responses to law enforcement's potential interception needs within specific types of geographic areas. The following discussion highlights the methodological steps used to arrive at the actual and maximum capacity figures published in the Initial Capacity Notice.

PART ONE: DERIVING KEY DATA FROM PAST INTERCEPTION ACTIVITY

As a first step, we sought to establish a baseline of past simultaneous interception activity. Information concerning the actual number of all types of simultaneous interceptions occurring throughout the United States in the recent past was collected. Such information, needed to establish the baseline, had never before been collected and did not exist in a single repository. Amassing this detailed and extremely sensitive information required an unprecedented and time-consuming effort on the part of law enforcement. It involved identifying sources from which accurate information could be retrieved in an efficient and effective manner. Specifically, we sought to identify sources that could provide the exact number of all types of interceptions (to include call content, pen register, and trap and trace) performed by all federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies, in terms of the actual number of telephone lines[3] intercepted at each locality.

To obtain specific line-related information regarding past simultaneous electronic surveillance activity, records of interception activity were acquired from telecommunications carriers, law enforcement officials, and most importantly, from the Federal and State Clerks of Court's offices—the official repository for all interceptions conducted simultaneously between January 1, 1993 and March 1, 1995, for all geographic locations. Specifically, highly sensitive interception information pertaining to each interception start/end dates, and to area code and exchange was collected. The period January 1, 1993 to March 1, 1995 was chosen in order to obtain recent interception information that was reasonably retrievable given the time constraint of one year imposed by the CALEA with regard to publishing a capacity notice.

Approximately 1500 telecommunications carriers (those serving the majority of subscribers in the U.S., and representing the largest of the wireline and cellular telephone companies (as of March 1995)) were requested to provide information that would identify where and how many interceptions had occurred within their networks during the period of study. Acquisition and examination of sensitive electronic surveillance records maintained pursuant to statute under seal with the Clerks of Court offices was pursued through two separate efforts. All Federal court order information was collected pursuant to special court orders directing the unsealing of interception court orders for the limited purpose of enabling the Attorney General/FBI to comply with the capacity notice obligation. State and local law enforcement information was obtained through the State Attorneys General (AG) offices. Each State AG was requested to coordinate the collection of interception information within the AG's respective State.

By reviewing the data collected, the number of simultaneous interceptions that had occurred within switching facilities was identified throughout the country during the study period. One of the key pieces of relevant information was the highest number of interceptions that had ever occurred simultaneously within any telecommunications carrier's switch.[5]

For the years studied, the highest number of simultaneous interceptions occurring within any one switch in the United States was 220; that is, 220 pen register, trap and trace and/or call content interceptions were active at the same time within a particular switch. Further analysis revealed that the 220 interception number far exceeded the number of simultaneous interceptions conducted in other high activity switches and was due to a single unusual occurrence. The switch that had the second highest level of simultaneous activity supported 120 pen register, trap and trace and/or call content interceptions.

The distribution of baseline simultaneous interception activity by switch was varied. Among switches which had supported interceptions during the period studied, there was a broad and varied distribution of simultaneous interceptions ranging from 1 to 120. Switches with the greatest levels of interception activity frequently existed in urban areas. Switches with lower levels of interception activity existed across a variety of geographic areas, encompassing urban, suburban, and rural areas.

The review of the baseline of interception activity yielded certain key data on simultaneous interceptions for specific switching systems, but law enforcement usually approaches crime within the context of geographic or jurisdictional areas. The next analysis challenge was to associate the baseline simultaneous interception data on specific switches with law enforcement's need to express requirements relative to geographic areas. To do this, law enforcement sought to identify geographic boundaries that could provide common reference points between law enforcement and telecommunications carriers.

A number of geographic boundaries which define service areas of telecommunications carriers were considered (e.g., State lines, local access transport areas (LATA), metropolitan statistical areas (MSA), rural service areas (RSA), and major and basic trading areas (MTA, BTA)). However, in each case, these boundaries did not provide a good match with defined law enforcement areas. Law enforcement jurisdictional legal authority in a great number of cases is defined by county boundaries (i.e., for local law enforcement agencies). County boundaries rarely change and are not disputable. In most cases, a group of counties are encompassed by the boundaries that define a telecommunications carrier's service area. Consequently, county boundaries were used as the common reference tool in formulating an analysis for future capacity.

From the baseline of interception activity, interception data was aggregated for a group of specific switches by county. Switches were assigned to counties based on their geographic location. The data can be divided into their different levels (or categories) or interception activity: high, moderate, and low.

As part of the consultative process with the telecommunications carriers, law enforcement understood that one of the primary carrier concerns with regard to capacity was that each switch in a carrier's network should not be held to the same requirement for capacity levels. The carriers had indicated generally that although CALEA requires the Attorney General to estimate future capacity sizings and to estimate future potential interception activity that may occur in their network, every attempt should be made by law enforcement to express its needs in accordance with the variability of interceptions that had occurred in the past. Recognizing this, we chose to define law enforcement's potential future interception needs using categories and not just one absolute number that would apply without regard to the often varied nature of interceptions in a carrier's geographic service area.

As a result of considering the relative relationships between law enforcement and telecommunications carriers geographic areas, it was determined that three separate categories for stating capacity requirements should be created. The use of categories permitted capacity requirements to be stated in a way that reasonably reflected, and was responsive to, law enforcement interception needs without unduly burdening all carriers with the same level of capacity or requiring a particular carrier to provide the same capacity level everywhere in its network. As alluded to in the Initial Capacity Notice, Category I represents a small number of geographic areas where the greatest level of interception activity typically has occurred and is likely to occur. Category II also represents a relatively small number of geographic areas, which consist of some urban and suburban areas. Category III represents the vast majority of areas where electronic surveillance activity has historically been low or nonexistent, principally in rural and many suburban areas.

With regard to Category III, as the nation moves toward the future, law enforcement must have the capability to conduct a minimum level of electronic surveillance in any locality, regardless of previous levels of criminal activity or prior levels of electronic surveillance activity. Terrorism, drug trafficking, and violent crimes are constant and unpredictable threats to the public in all localities, as evidenced by the Oklahoma City bombing in April 1995. Consequently, unlike Categories I and II, which are defined principally with reference to past levels of electronic surveillance activity, Category III constitutes a minimum interception capacity for any location in which law enforcement may need an interception capability in order to protect the public and effectively enforce the law.

Once the geographic areas could be generally (but only tentatively) associated with each category, the historic baseline of interception activity for these areas could be used as a way of defining the distinct levels of past electronic surveillance activity. For the Category I level, as noted above, the highest number of simultaneous interceptions from a switch was 120. Our analysis also determined that within the Category II level the highest number of simultaneous interceptions from a switch was 42.

THE USE OF PERCENTAGES AND ENGINEERED CAPACITY

Law enforcement considered it appropriate and prudent to express capacity requirements in the Initial Capacity Notice in terms of a percentage rather than as a fixed number for several reasons. First, percentages are very appropriate, if not essential, with regard to new service providers, new switches, new services, and new technologies. If absolute numbers were set forth, the introduction of new basic service, as well as more advanced services and features, could be impeded—a prospect that is unacceptable to either the Congress, law enforcement, or the telecommunications industry. Second, percentages allow capacity requirements to adjust slightly to a changing subscriber base as it increases or decreases over time.

To enable carriers to apply the percentages to the affected systems in their networks properly, capacity level percentages were tied to engineered capacity. Engineered capacity was referred to in the Initial Capacity Notice as the maximum number of subscribers that can be served by a carrier's equipment, facilities, or service. In the main, a carrier's switching facility was the key network component associated with this foregoing terminology. With regard to the highest level of simultaneous interception activity in the baseline data with regard to Category I (120), the switch associated with that interception activity was one that typically served an average of 35,000 subscribers. This led to the historical electronic surveillance activity being expressed as a percentage of engineered capacity of 0.34%. This percentage was derived by dividing the 120 simultaneous interceptions by 35,000 subscribers. With regard to the highest level of simultaneous interception activity noted in the baseline data occurring with regard to Category II (42), the switch associated with that interception activity was one that typically served an average of 27,000 subscribers. This led to the historical electronic surveillance activity being expressed as a percentage of engineered capacity of 0.16%. This percentage was derived by dividing the 42 simultaneous interceptions by 27,000 subscribers.

As discussed above, the interception activity which was now being associated with Category III reflected little or no activity in the past. Hence the capacity level associated with Category III was dervived in a different manner. To establish a percentage regarding areas where there had been little or no past interception activity, for purposes of future analyses, we examined the distribution of historical interception activity for those switches with very little or not interception activity. The majority of these switches had electronic surveillance activity of less than 0.1% of the capacity associated with such switches. This led law enforcement to assign 0.1% as the level of historical electronic surveillance activity for Category III, expressed as a percentage of engineered capacity. This figure, therefore, was selected essentially to ensure a bare minimum capacity to support law enforcement interceptions.

PART TWO: ESTIMATING AND USING GROWTH RATES TO PROJECT FUTURE CAPACITY AND INTERCEPTION ACTIVITY

CALEA's mandate that law enforcement identify capacity requirements marked the first time future carrier capacity sizings and future potential interception activity were required to be estimated. Although CALEA provided no specific date as an outer bound for the projection for maximum capacity, the year 2004 was used for its projection of maximum capacity. We used the year 2004 because it reflects a ten year period from the last date for which historical data was available (1994). A ten year period is commonly used as a period of time within which to analyze and prepare projections. An analysis of a period of this length also provides the affected telecommunications carriers with the information that would produce the greatest level of stability for the mid-term to intermediate future. By comparison, CALEA specifies October 1998 as the date for projecting potential future interception activity (actual capacity).

Four steps were followed to determine the maximum and actual capacity percentages which were published in the Initial Capacity Notice. These four steps are as follows:

STEP 1: ESTABLISHING A STATISTICAL MODEL; PROJECTING TITLE III COURT ORDER TRENDS AS A PREDICATE FOR PROJECTING FUTURE DESIGN CAPACITY AND POTENTIAL FUTURE INTERCEPTION ACTIVITY

Projections regarding future design capacity that may be required to accommodate unusual future interception activity, as well as the amount of potential future interception activity itself (call content interceptions, as well as the much more prevalent pen register and trap and trace interceptions), in terms of the number of lines that possibly could be implicated, are not readily and easily derived. For example, when one considers just one of the relevant groups of information (past Title III court order authorizations) it becomes apparent that a simple straight line trend does not exist. In reviewing the number of such authorizations on a yearly basis over the last 15 years (1980–1994), there is over a 100% increase (from 566 to 1154). However, the year to year increases are anything but consistent, with variations from -12% to +19% occurring by way of yearly changes.

Although it may be impossible to discern precisely why increases (or decreases) occur on a yearly basis with regard to all of the types of interception activity, a number of factors were considered (discussed further below) which over time presumably would logically influence such activity. In brief, these factors relate to population, telecommunications technology, law enforcement resources, and relevant crime statistics.

Notwithstanding the difficulty in making long range estimations about a design capacity level capable of accommodating reasonable growth over the intermediate future (1998–2004) and which, more importantly, could also address totally unexpected worst case scenarios (maximum capacity) and future potential, interception activity (actual capacity), in terms of the number of lines implicated, we were obligated to respond to CALEA's mandate to produce capacity estimates.

Law enforcement determined that it was imperative to construct and utilize an analytical statistical model in order to address the variability related to relevant historical data that could be associated with interception activity. The model selected was a widely-used model referred to as a multi-variable linear regression statistical model. With such a model, future trends central to predicting capacity could be projected.

In broad terms, this model sought to project potential future behavior based upon an analysis of the relationships between two data groups for which historical data was available over the last 15 years. One data group was the number of criminal Title III court orders authorized between 1980 and 1994. The other data group was composed of a suite of relevant factors (multi-variables) related to population, telecommunications technology, law enforcement resources, and relevant crime statistics. Once trend relationships were noted between the second group and the first, an equation was produced from which projections as to the future level of the first group (Title III court orders) could be established based on growth projections of the second group. The projection for the criminal Title III court order authorizations was an important analytic first step in projecting the design capacity and future potential interception activity in terms of the number of lines (interceptions) that may be involved.

The first data group consisted of the number of Title III court order authorizations recorded per year in the Wiretap Report, compiled each year by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts. In an attempt to establish a trend, we examined the criminal Title III court order authorizations granted per year over the last 15 years (1980–1994). As noted above, however, an examination of this data showed significant yearly fluctuations thereby precluding a simple, straight line trend for approximating future authorizations. Also, as noted above, the Wiretap Report only documents the number of criminal Title III court orders; it does not specify the actual number of call content interceptions associated with each order, nor does it address at all the vastly greater number of interceptions associated with pen registers and traps and traces. Nonetheless, because it was the only longstanding electronic surveillance data source in existence, it was concluded that it necessarily should play an important role in the model because it did document past, relevant interception-related information from which projections of design capacity and future potential interception activity could later be made.

The second data group consisted of factors or multi-variables deemed relevant with regard to the conduct of all types of interception activity. These factors, as noted above, were population, telecommunications technology, law enforcement resources, and relevant crime statistics. Historical and projected future data on population totals was collected from the United States Census Bureau. Historical and projected future data for wireline telecommunications subscribers was collected from the Federal Communications Commission. Historical data on wireless subscribers was acquired from reviewing publications issued by the Cellular Telecommunications Industry Association (CTIA). Projected future data for wireless subscribers was derived based upon an analysis of information found in trade journals concerning future projections of the number of wireless subscribers and attributed to the CTIA, the Personal Communications Industry Association, and other industry sources. Historical data on total number of law enforcement officers and reported incidents of violent crime was collected from the FBI's Uniform Crime Report. Projected future data on the total number of law enforcement officers and crime was derived based on an assumed linear growth rate of the historical data. For each of the above factors, projections for future data were made out to the year 2004.

STEP 2: COMPUTING GROWTH RATES

Using the projected future data produced by the equation, the statistics indicated a growth rate of 130% in the first group between 1994 and 2004, a factor which was included in the subsequent analysis used to project maximum (design) capacity. By comparison, a projection for potential future interception activity (actual capacity) was arrived at by noting the statistics in the first group, that had applied the same trends projected by the statistical model, suggesting a growth rate between 1994 and 1998 of 54 percent. As noted above, when one reviews the number of criminal Title III court order authorizations on a yearly basis during the last 15 years (1980–1994), there is more than a 100% increase (from 566 to 1154). Also, when one reviews available official reports regarding the vastly more prevalent pen register and trap and trace court orders granted during the last 8 years, one observes an increase of 219%. Finally, for the same period, with regard to such pen register and trap and trace court orders "the number of persons whose telephone facilities were affected" increased by 345%.[6] Consequently, the model's results are considered to be reasonable and consistent with past interception-related activity and appropriate for use as part of the analysis.

STEP 3: PROJECTIONS FOR DESIGN CAPACITY AND POTENTIAL FUTURE INTERCEPTION ACTIVITY

As noted above, the historical interception activity expressed as a percentage of engineered capacity for Category I was 0.34% (120 simultaneous interceptions out of a switch serving a possible 35,000 subscribers); and the historical interception activity expressed as a percentage of engineered capacity for Category II was 0.16% (42 simultaneous interceptions out of a switch serving a possible 27,000 subscribers). For Category III, the minimum level of interception activity expressed as a percentage of engineered capacity was 0.1%. The computed growth rates of 130% and 54% were converted into growth multipliers of 2.3 and 1.54, for maximum and actual capacity, respectively. By multiplying the historical interception activity figures for Category I, Category II, and Category III by the growth multipliers, we calculated numbers for a "raw" maximum and actual capacity, as illustrated in the table below.

RAW MAXIMUM AND ACTUAL CAPACITY PREDICTED BY THE GROWTH FACTORS

	Maximum	Actual
Category I	0.34%2.3=0.78%	0.34%1.54=0.52%
Category II	0.16%2.3=0.37%	0.16%1.54=0.25%
Category III	0.10%2.3=0.23%	0.10%1.54=0.15%

STEP 4: APPLYING REASONABLENESS CRITERIA TO THE RAW CALCULATIONS

In projecting future design capacity (maximum capacity) and capacity for potential future interception activity (actual capacity) that may be needed by all law enforcement agencies, for publication in the Federal Register, the FBI made downward adjustments to the numbers that were set forth with regard to the raw actual capacity in both Categories I and III. A substantial downward adjustment was made in Category III. These downward adjustments were made because law environment recognized that a majority of the affected telecommunications carriers fall in Category III, and that our historical interception activity was minimal in this category. Therefore, we chose to lessen the burden on the telecommunications industry and minimize the costs of installing solutions, consistent with assuring an essential minimum level of interception capacity.

The numbers set forth for the raw maximum capacity in Categories I, II, and III were adjusted upward for a number of reasons. First, as noted above, the interception activity associated with pen registers and traps and traces by far represents the most frequently used type of interception. The growth rate in the number of pen register and trap and trace court orders far exceeds that projected in the statistical analysis. As noted above, the percentage of increase in such court orders during the past 8 years was 219% and the number of persons whose telephone facilities were affected increased 345%.

Second, although the peak number of simultaneous interceptions identified in the baseline data was 220, we elected not to use it in the statistical analysis because it was deemed to be an anomaly. However, this level of interception activity, although anomalous, is indicative of the type of worst-case scenarios that law enforcement should not easily ignore or completely discount. Hence some provision needs to be made for such situations.

Third, although every effort was made to capture as accurately as possible the actual levels of past interception activity in compiling our baseline of historical intercept information, there may be some instances where data was not fully collected or reported. Also, there is an amount of interception activity associate with national security that must be accounted for in the final capacity projections.

Fourth, during the study period (1980–1994), the number of States granting State and local law enforcement interception authority by statute increased and a number of States expanded interception authority to cover additional types of crimes and/or additional types of communications devices (e.g., cellular telephones and pagers). There is a reasonable likelihood that in the future other States may grant similar interception authority and/or increase the scope of existing interception authority.

Finally, law enforcement believed that judgment needed to be brought to bear on the numbers for raw actual and maximum capacity, in terms of making appropriate upward or downward adjustments. In particular, the FBI, acting on behalf of the entire law enforcement community, had a responsibility to be careful not to overstate or understate capacity needs. Importantly, however, if capacity needs were understated it could pose direct harm to the public safety and effective law enforcement.

INITIAL CAPACITY NOTICE

On October 16, 1995, the FBI published in the Federal Register its Initial Capacity Notice. The estimates of actual and maximum capacity, expressed as a percentage of engineered capacity, were stated as follows in the Initial Capacity Notice:

ESTIMATES FOR PROJECTED MAXIMUM AND ACTUAL CAPACITY AS PUBLISHED IN THE FEDERAL REGISTER

	Maximum	Actual
Category I	1.00%	0.50%
Category II	0.50%	0.25%
Category III	0.25%	0.05%

After the FBI's publication of the Initial Capacity Notice in the Federal Register, you requested two documents in your correspondence: (1) the historical baseline of electronic surveillance activity, and (2) an analysis of that activity. By way of response and clarification, although we examined past electronic surveillance activity and utilized certain key pieces of information derived therefrom as discussed in this letter, no "document", as such, was ever created. Similarly, the factors utilized in our analysis were never compiled into a document.

Nonetheless, because of the interest and the misunderstandings that have been associated with this matter, we currently are in the process of preparing two methodology documents which will explain our capacity notice efforts in greater depth. The first document will describe the process used to collect historical electronic surveillance information. The second document will describe the analysis used in developing the Initial Capacity Notice, as well as the Final Capacity Notice. Regarding the latter, it will take into account the written comments we have received and the input from our ongoing meetings with the telecommunications industry and other interest groups. The FBI will provide copies of these two documents to you upon their completion.

SUMMARY

As you are aware, in 1968 when Congress statutorily authorized court ordered electronic surveillance, telephone technology permitted law enforcement to execute, without impairment, essentially all court orders—a 100 percent capability/capacity to accommodate law enforcement's court ordered electronic surveillance needs. However, the onset of new and advanced technologies has begun to erode the capacity and capability of the telecommunications industry to support law enforcement's interception needs. For the first time, technological limitations will potentially be set on law enforcement's ability to lawfully conduct electronic surveillance. In view of these potential limitations, an attempt was made to estimate law enforcement's capacity needs in an accurate and reasonable manner with the goal of striking a balance of meeting law enforcement's interception needs without introducing unduly burdensome or excessive requirements on telecommunications carriers. This in no way changes law enforcement's fundamental statutory responsibility to obtain proper legal authority to conduct electronic surveillance. CALEA's capacity requirements simply ensure that, after law enforcement obtains proper legal authority, telecommunications carriers will have sufficient capacity to accommodate lawfully authorized electronic surveillance activity.

To project capacity needs, the previously described national methodology was employed in order to prepare an Initial Capacity Notice for publication in the Federal Register. Since release of the Notice, law enforcement has met with privacy advocates, the telecommunications industry, and other interested parties to clarify and further describe how best to apply capacity needs within a given carrier's network, and it is reviewing and considering the formal written comments provided in response to the Initial Capacity Notice.

In closing, CALEA is important to the public safety and national security of this nation and its full and timely implementation is critically important to the American public. On behalf of the law enforcement community, we would again like to express our appreciation for your support and leadership regarding this significant and complex issue. With the continued support of the Congress, we are confident that CALEA will be fully implemented in an effective and efficient manner.

FOOTNOTES

[1] For purposes of this discussion, the word "interception" refers to all types of interceptions: (1) interceptions of communication content (e.g., Title III); and (2) interceptions of dialing-related information (call identifying information) derived from pen registers and traps and traces.

[2] 47 U.S.C. 1003 (1994).

[3] For purposes of this discussion, the word "lines" refers to the transmission path from a subscriber's terminal to the network via a wireline or wireless medium.

[4] Although a valuable source for historical information on criminal Title III (call content) court orders, The Wiretap Report, published annually by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, does not identify the actual number of interception lines associated with each court order or, more importantly, with the vastly greater number of lines associated with pen register and trap and trace interceptions that have been performed by all law enforcement agencies. Even though the FBI used information pertaining to the number of court orders reported in The Wiretap Report as an essential element for forecasting purposes, the Report does not contain the line-related information that was needed to identify the actual level of past interception activity related to specific switches.

[5] For purposes of this discussion, the term "switch" also represents a licensed cellular service area.

By law, the Department of Justice is required to report to the Congress on a yearly basis information on the use of pen registers and trap and trace devices by law enforcement agencies within the Department of Justice. This report includes information concerning the number of original orders, extensions, the number of investigations, the number of persons whose telephone facilities were affected, and the number of overall dialings.

TRANSFER OF NUCLEAR TECHNOLOGY TO THIRD COUNTRIES

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I rise today as the Chairman of the Subcommittee on East Asian and Pacific Affairs to express my grave concern at recent reports regarding the sale or transfer by the People's Republic of China of nuclear technology to third countries.

It has been widely reported in the domestic press that the U.S. intelligence agencies have thoroughly credible evidence that these sales have occurred; I have seen some of this evidence myself, as have many of my colleagues, and find it to be overwhelming.

In the past, we have seen evidence of missile sales to Pakistan, and the transfer of certain nuclear technology to Iran, in violation of United States law and international nuclear agreements. The most recent reports involved the sale of over 5,000 ring magnets to Pakistan. These magnets are component parts of centrifuges used to enrich uranium to make it weapons-grade. The magnets are made of a highly advanced alloy, and according to experts will significantly enhance Pakistan's nuclear program by allowing its laboratory at Kahuta to upgrade its centrifuges at the rate of between 1,000 and 2,000 per year.

The People's Republic of China has not denied that the sale took place. Somewhat inconsistently, Pakistan categorically denies these reports. Mr. President, Karachi's denials ring completely hollow. How many times did the Pakistani Government deny that it was pursuing the development of nuclear weapons, only to have the United States produce irrefutable evidence to the contrary? How many times did they assure us that they had no such intentions, only to be caught sneaking behind our backs doing the precise things they denied? Mr. President, one hates to use the word "lie," but as the saying goes—if the shoe fits.

Almost more troubling than the sales themselves, Mr. President, is what is shaping up to be the Clinton administration's completely inadequate response to the sales. Under U.S. law, we are required to impose a variety of sanctions on any nation selling nuclear weapons technology in violation of nonproliferation commitments. Only if the President states that requirement because of the national interest are the sanctions waived.

Here, we have solid evidence that the People's Republic of China has violated its agreements in this regard. The failure to impose the sanctions required by our laws, I believe, is a mistake of the greatest magnitude. I can think of no worse signal to send the Chinese Government than for us to draw a line in the sand, have them cross it, and for us to shrug it off and say "now don't do that again." The Chinese are quick to pick up on occasions when we fail to stick to our guns, and only see it as encouragement. This is why I have been so supportive of U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor. He has told the Chinese in the trade arena that if they do not abide by their agreements, there will be a price to pay. And, when necessary, he has moved steadfastly to impose that price in the form of sanctions. The Chinese, recognizing the strength of such a position, have subsequently backed down and honored their agreements.

For us to back down from our principles in this matter is to completely call into question our determination in a host of other areas, the security of Taiwan comes immediately to mind, and as Senator SPECTER has noted "make[s] our national policy a laughing stock and encourage[s] a proliferation of nuclear weapons." Yet the Clinton administration is showing every sign of being willing to shrug off the People's Republic of China actions, rap them on the nose, and ask them to please not do it again.

During the 1992 presidential campaign, candidate Clinton took President Bush to task for "coddling dictators"—especially the Chinese. Well Mr. President, like he has on so many other issues that were central to his campaign President Clinton has flip-flopped on this one, saying one thing but doing some thing completely different. I ask my colleagues, who is doing the coddling now? The White House appears close to waiving sanctions because it is worried about offending China and because it is kow-towing to United States business interests in an election year afraid of the effects on their bottom-line that sanctions might have.

Can you imagine that, Mr. President? As the Washington Post pointed out this morning, "The Chinese are the accused violators, and the Americans—as the complaining and injured party—are backing off." This administration is backing off in the shortsighted hope that Beijing has learned its lesson and won't do it again. It's like telling a child not to take a cookie, watching him take it, but not telling him he's a bad boy in the hopes that maybe he won't want to take another cookie. And this is not the only area in which the Clinton administration is coddling Beijing. USTR Kantor, who has on several occasions urged the White House to impose sanctions on the PRC because it is still in violation of several of the key provisions of the Sino-American intellectual property rights agreement, has been prevented by this administration from setting a deadline for Chinese compliance for fear of upsetting the violators of that agreement.

Mr. President, I join my colleagues in both Houses in calling for the imposition of the sanctions required by U.S. law in this case. We need to say what me mean, and then do what we say. Any failure or hesitation to do so can only be interpreted in Beijing as a sign of weakness, and sets a very dangerous precedent that we will regret down the road.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. LEAHY pertaining to the introduction of S. 1567 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

THE TAX LIMITATION AMENDMENT

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I wanted to speak briefly this morning on two subjects. The first concerns an announcement that the Senator from Minnesota, who is presiding as of this moment, and I and Senator BOB SMITH made yesterday relating to a constitutional amendment proposal which we are soon going to be introducing in the Senate, which has already been introduced in the House with about 150 cosponsors, which we hope will be quickly adopted by both the House and Senate and sent to the States for ratification, in reference to a constitutional amendment to require a supermajority of two-thirds voting to approve any tax increase at the Federal Government level.

We want to do this because of the possibility, and I hope the probability, that some form of simple, single-rate tax reform could be adopted sometime after next January. Some proponents call it a flat tax. But a tax proposal of the kind that I support would include exemptions and certain deductions, so it cannot be properly characterized as a pure flat tax, but a simpler tax rate system with a limited number of deductions and exemptions is the kind of tax reform that most Americans seem very supportive of at this time, and which I hope the Congress will adopt.

If that occurs, it will be doubly important for us to ensure that tax rates cannot easily be increased. Because without the deductions, credits, and exemptions that taxpayers can take advantage of today to shelter their income, if tax rates are increased, once those exemptions and deductions and credits have been eliminated from the Tax Code, which is what we propose to do, there will be nowhere to go if Congress then begins to raise the single tax rate. That is why we think we need a constitutional requirement of a two-thirds support for such a tax increase in order to protect the taxpayers of America.

Let me quote from the Kemp report. The Kemp Commission was a commission appointed by Senate Majority Leader ROBERT DOLE and House Speaker NEWT GINGRICH to look into the question of fundamental tax reform and to make recommendations. It was chaired by former HUD Secretary Jack Kemp. Here is what the Kemp report says with regard to this proposal.

> The roller-coaster ride of tax policy in the past few decades has fed citizens' cynicism about the possibility of real, long-term reform, while fueling frustration with Washington. The initial optimism inspired by the low rates of the 1986 Tax Reform Act soured into disillusionment and anger when taxes subsequently were hiked two times in less than seven years. The commission concludes that a two-thirds super-majority vote of Congress will earn Americans' confidence in the longevity, predictability, and stability of any new tax system.

That is what we hope to achieve by a simpler, fairer, single-rate tax system: stability, predictability and longevity. But if Congress can quickly raise the rate after we have put such a system into effect, then that stability and longevity and predictability will have been eroded. That is why we think it is important to make it a little bit more difficult for Congress to raise taxes by requiring a two-thirds vote.

Let me note a couple of things about some history here. Since the last attempt at comprehensive reform in 1986, when the number of tax brackets were reduced from 14 down to 2, there have been 4,000 amendments to the Tax Code in less than 10 years. The number of tax rates, of course, is back up to five. But 4,000 amendments? It is too easy to change the Tax Code. Many of those amendments, of course, resulted in taxpayers paying more money. Not only have the rules changed in the middle of the game for many taxpayers, but for many it was after the game was over. The 1993 Clinton tax increase retroactively raised taxes, even on the dead.

The frequency of changes not only makes people more vulnerable to tax increases but also makes it virtually impossible to make financial plans for the future, whether to save for a child's education or invest in your business or set money aside in a pension fund—or hold it to pay taxes. If you have to have that possibility, then you cannot predict with certainty that you can invest in these more important things. So the tax limitation amendment puts an end to that volatility by requiring there be sufficient consensus and partisan support around the country before taxes will be raised again.

One final point. To the extent we are interested in reducing the power of the special interests, of the lobbyists who come to change the Tax Code to get special benefits for their particular interest, to reduce their tax burden, to create a loophole, as it were—this two-thirds majority requirement would really put an end to that kind of practice because, if we assume that we want to continue to collect a roughly equal amount of revenue and that therefore any proposal would have to be revenue neutral, any proposal to create a loophole for a special interest and therefore result in less money to the Treasury would necessarily require that tax revenues be raised in some other area. But to do that would require a two-thirds vote. So I think Members of the House and Senate would look much more skeptically at proposals to reduce taxes for certain taxpayers if we knew that, in order to make up that revenue, we would have to have a two-thirds vote. Therefore, I think the influence of special interests would be very much reduced.

The tax limitation amendment represents an important reform whether we stay with the existing Tax Code or we go to a new system. But it will be particularly important if the American people conclude that a single-rate kind of reform is the one that we should adopt, because, again, once all of the deductions and exemptions and credits are eliminated, taxpayers will be particularly vulnerable to tax rate increases. I think we should ensure it is not too easy for Congress to raise their taxes again.

Again, I compliment Senator BOB SMITH from New Hampshire and the Senator from Minnesota, who is presiding at the moment, for their support as original cosponsors of this important constitutional amendment.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I would like to clarify the record somewhat and respond to some of the comments that have been made today and earlier this week by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, Senator GLENN, about our schedule.

First, I think it should be noted that the first month of the calendar year 1996 has been a very productive month legislatively for the Senate. We have had some extraordinary activity. We may not have been in session as many days as has been the case in some years gone by, but in terms of actual production, we have produced some of the biggest, most important pieces of legislation in history during the last month. I would like to just read off the list. Certainly not all Senators agreed with how these pieces of legislation were dealt with, but they were very important pieces of legislation and in most cases passed overwhelmingly.

For instance, we have already passed S. 1260, which is a fair housing bill, out of the Banking Committee. A lot of work went into it. It did pass by unanimous consent, but that was because it was an important bill with broad, bipartisan support.

We passed, in January, the Defense authorization conference report for this fiscal year. That was brought about by the fact that the President had vetoed the first Defense authorization bill. Some modifications were made. I did not agree with all of them. I know the Senator in the chair did not agree with all of them. But we did come to an agreement on a second conference report, and it passed overwhelmingly and has gone to the President for his signature.

The START II Treaty was passed after discussion by the Senate. We passed a continuing resolution that kept the Government operating while the President and the Congress can continue to work on trying to come to some agreement on appropriations bills that have not yet been passed. We took action on legislation raising the debt limit so that there would be no question that Social Security checks would go out to our senior citizens the 1st of March. We passed the Telecommunications Act of 1996, probably the biggest jobs creation bill that has passed this decade, legislation that took months—in fact years—to come to fruition. There have been 10 years of effort to get telecommunications reform legislation passed by the Congress. We had not changed the telecommunications laws substantially since 1934. So we deregulated, we opened up all of the various areas of telecommunications for competition. It will mean lower prices, and more services and information for people. There is going to be a tremendous revolution because the Government is taking down the barriers it put up. This is a new era of competition, a new time of choice of services and products for people. The bill passed 91 to 5. Forty-eight hours before it passed most people would have bet you that we would not get it passed at all. Well, it was signed into law just yesterday by the President of the United States.

Through tremendous efforts by the distinguished majority leader, Senator DOLE, we were able to come to an agreement this week on a farm bill, a farm bill that passed the Senate with 64 votes; a bipartisan vote. I think we had 49 Members of the majority and 15 or so Members of the minority that voted for this bill, a bill that had been tangled up for months. It was included in the budget reconciliation package that the President vetoed. So we had to take action on a farm bill before our farmers actually went into the fields to start plantings.

In the South, in my State of Mississippi the farmers are getting close—within the next 2 weeks—to start to plant. And they had no idea what they could expect for the farm legislation and what they could expect for this year.

So we got that bill through the Senate. So there has been a lot of action by the Senate this year. And to answer those who come to the floor and say, "What is the Congress doing?"—I have just given a very impressive list. I would put that list up against any list from just about any January over the past 20 years in which I have been in the Congress.

Just today we are at work. We are having major speeches here on the floor of the Senate. And there is an effort underway right now to get agreement on two important bills out of the Environment and Public Works Committee. We are trying to get an agreement on the District of Columbia appropriations conference report. In fact, we will take action to make sure that we have cloture, if it is necessary, so that we can take up that District of Columbia conference report as soon as we come back. In fact, we will have a vote on February 27 at 2:15 on that conference report. And committee meetings are working.

You cannot just pop legislation out to the floor. There have to be subcommittee hearings, full committee hearings, there needs to be markup, we need to have investigations, and we need to have oversight. This is the time of the year when in fact the committees should be the most active. The Budget Committee is getting ready to try to see how we can deal with the next fiscal year budget. The Banking Committee is having hearings. The Judiciary Committee is having hearings. This is when you do the preparation for the legislative process that will really start moving forward in March and April. So there is a lot that is going on legislatively in the Senate.

Now, it has been suggested that we should not be out, that the schedule for the remainder of February is a charade, that there was not a recorded vote on whether we should be in pro forma session.

I have to remind my colleagues in the minority that there was an agreement reached between the leaders on the schedule. The majority leader, Senator DOLE, and the minority leader, Senator DASCHLE, after a lot of conversation, worked out a schedule that was agreed to. On specific days there would be only pro forma sessions, on other days there would be opportunity for agreements to be entered into, for speeches to be made on important issues by the Senators. This was agreed to. It was not a charade. It was not snuck through. A lot of people were consulted.

So we are going to be in session. We are going to be having activities. We are going to be trying to reach agreements.

Then it was suggested by the Senator from Ohio that we have appropriations bills that have not passed the Congress for the present fiscal year when we should have done them last year. That is true. But let us look at why they have not been passed.

First of all, everybody around here complains that we have not finished legislation on health and human services and education. They are right. We have not. Do you know why? Because the Democrats in the Senate have refused to allow us to even bring it up for debate. They have threatened to filibuster the motion to proceed. In common language, this means they will not even let us bring it up without talking it to death.

Why has that been done? They object to a provision with regard to striker replacement. That was brought about by the fact that the President, unconstitutionally in my opinion, by Executive order tried to accomplish what the courts and the Congress have refused to do. He says that when there are protracted strikes, employers cannot replace strikers to keep their business alive. It has been taken to court, and a Federal court has already ruled that was an improper action by the President. Now it is going to go on appeal probably all the way to the Supreme Court. But I feel pretty confident that the President's action is going to be stricken down as unconstitutional.

Yet the Democrats have refused to allow us to bring this bill up to provide appropriations for the important Departments of Health and Human Services and Education because we have a provision in there that says basically what the President did was wrong. Now, the Federal courts agree with us.

That is the truth of why this legislation has not been brought up. Except for the objections on the minority side of the aisle, the Democrats, we would have passed that legislation through and got it into conference and sent it to the President weeks—in fact, months—ago. So how we can hear whining from the Democratic side of the aisle about why these departments have not been funded is pretty astounding to me when you look at the facts.

Now, with regard to these other departments that have not been funded: State, Justice, Interior, Commerce, EPA, we have passed the legislation. The President vetoed those bills. And when you look at why he vetoed them, there is the real charade. He vetoed the interior bill because of some policy decisions that are very debatable to begin with and are minor as compared to the overall Interior Department appropriations bill.

Also, I think it is very clear that the distinguished chairman of the Interior Subcommittee of Appropriations, the Senator from Washington, Senator GORTON, and the Congressman from the House, RALPH REGULA from Ohio, have worked very hard with the Secretary of the Interior, Secretary Babbitt, to get an agreement to move this bill. In fact, they almost had an agreement. And then the word came back that the White House had said, "Do not negotiate any more with these congressional Members. We are not going to agree to what they want."

Well, you know, there are three coequal branches of Government. We have to get legislation passed through the Congress and then the President, yes, has to sign it for it to be enacted. But when he says do not talk to them anymore, what are we to do? And then they have the temerity to complain that these departments are not funded.

Let me tell you this. There a lot of Americans who really have questions about just how much or if some of these departments should be funded. There are a lot of us who think that the Energy Department could probably be eliminated. Most people are not aware that a majority of the budget for the Energy Department is defense related. It is not even separate, not even applicable to the Energy Department. It is defense related. And the Commerce Department. The various agencies and divisions of the Commerce Department could be carried out as independent agencies or in other departments. We could save millions, millions of dollars. We might even cut down on some of the travel that we have seen from the Secretaries of Commerce and Energy.

I must also point out that historically the tradition has been in February around the Presidents Day recess

Congresses have always taken a few days to be with their constituents. I think it is a good idea for Congressmen and Senators to get out of this city, go home, listen to their constituents. That is an important part of the legislative process to hear what your constituents have to say, to listen to the farmers, to listen to the fishermen, to listen to the business men and women, to listen to the parents express their concern about crime and drugs and the poor quality of education in America, to hear from American people who even though we continue to spend more and more billions of dollars for Federal aid to education the quality of education continues to slide. Why is that? I bet we could find some answers if we listened to the people at home. So for us to be off a few days around Presidents Day, the Lincoln Day recess period, is very traditional. Everybody in the House and Senate understands that. And so hopefully the Senators and the Congressmen are going to be back home. I am going to my State. I am going to meet with my constituents. I am going to talk to civic clubs, going to speak to the State Grand Masters Banquet; I am going to speak to industrial groups. That is a very, very important part of our job.

So I just wanted to respond to some of the allegations about how there has been some secret agreement to have just pro forma sessions and morning business days. It was worked out very carefully between the joint leadership. I would like to see us pass all those appropriations bills, but the problem begins here, and it begins in the minority because they will not let us even bring up the Labor, HHS and Education bill.

I would like to also say, though, that I do agree with Senator GLENN and others that we still need to try to get an agreement on the budget between the President and the Congress. I am one of those incurable optimists who still believes it will be done, and it should be done. I think we were helped this week by the bipartisan agreement from the Governors with regard to Medicare and welfare. I do not like all of what they came up with, but I think they gave us a roadmap of how we can deal with the welfare issue and the need for welfare reform and changes in Medicaid, hopefully, that would save us some money.

That is one of the problems that worries me about what they suggested. I do not think you get welfare reform if you end up with a bill that costs more than the present welfare system. What kind of welfare reform is that? But they came up with some helpful suggestions. I think the budget negotiators have made real progress. I believe that we could get a budget agreement that would lead us to a balanced budget in 7 years using honest numbers that would significantly cut back on the amount of increase in spending in nondefense discretionary, that would give us some Medicaid, welfare, Medicare reform, and that would give some tax relief to the American people. I think we are going to make a mistake if we do not take some action soon to give a little boost to the economy, a little incentive for growth in the economy. The economy is showing tattered edges. We may not have a growth this year in the economy of even as much as 1.5 percent, which is very low and very weak. If we would cut the capital gains rate, it would have a tremendous impact on the economy. There would be growth and the creation of jobs. We need that legislation.

So I hope that when we come back February 26, Congress will give serious effort once again, our negotiators will give serious efforts to meeting with administration officials and see if we can come to an agreement. But an important part of that is going to be Medicare. Other than Social Security in the 1970's, I have never seen an issue that has been more demagoged than Medicare in the year 1995. Misinformation, misleading information, accusations that are absolutely not true about what the Republicans have tried to do to save, preserve, and protect Medicare.

We have warned that there is a solvency problem. We must take action now to make sure that Medicare is not only there for my 82-year-old mother but it will be there for us and for our children and grandchildren.

MEDICARE SHORTFALL

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, the headline in Monday's New York Times, February 5, was even more chilling than Washington's weather. It read, "Shortfall Posted by Medicare Fund Two Years Early. A Surplus Was Expected."

The chief actuary of the Health Care Finance Administration observed, "Things turned out a little worse than we expected." I will say they did. The administration had projected a $4.5 billion increase in the Medicare fund balance for fiscal year 1995. Instead, the balance fell by $35.7 million. The reason for the shortfall was twofold. First, income from payroll taxes was less than expected. Second, and more important, outlays were higher because of more hospital admissions than were expected.

Whatever the reasons, the day of reckoning is coming sooner than anyone had expected. Throughout last year, the Republicans in the House and the Senate have urged a solution for Medicare's fiscal ills. We have hammered home the estimates by the Medicare trustees that the program would slip into the red ink by 1997, and would go bankrupt by 2002.

Now it turns out even that dire forecast was on the optimistic side. Medicare has already started paying out more than it takes in. I cannot help but wonder how the White House will respond to this news. The administration spin experts must be wracking their brains on this one. In the face of all the facts, they have to come up with some way to portray President Clinton as the champion and savior of Medicare.

The fact is that instead of cooperating with the Congress, who wanted to preserve and protect Medicare last year, President Clinton launched his Medicare campaign and played Medicare politics ruthlessly, and I regret to say, somewhat successfully. He convinced or he scared many Americans into believing that our proposal to strengthen Medicare was instead a cut in its funding when, in fact, it would allow over the next 7 years for over a 60-percent increase. Only in Washington is a 60-percent increase in the level of spending over 7 years considered a cut.

They were somewhat successful in scaring the people into believing that. When he vetoed that proposal last December, he posed as the defender of Medicare against extremists in the Congress.

Now, the fiscal chickens are coming home to roost and they are headed for the roof of the west wing of the White House. Mr. President, Clinton's game plan for Medicare—to stonewall about the problem's financial peril in hope of getting safely reelected in another term after this year have been overtaken by the events that have occurred recently. He is trapped in a maze of his own mapping.

Here is the dilemma: To make it through this year, I guess he will have to come up with a Medicare salvage package of his own, but in order to do that he will have to call for a massive job crippling and probably recessionary hike in payroll taxes, or he will have to adopt most of the Republican plan to preserve Medicare. That would be the same plan he vetoed just last year with such gusto, and with Lyndon Johnson's pen, no less.

Of course, he will want to do neither. So, he will look for another way out for an escape, make an evasion. My guess is he will call for a national commission or a similar proposal to postpone the decisions that have to be made now. I hope I am wrong. I hope the President will take another look at the legislation of congressional Republicans, the work we have drafted, the year we spent developing this plan to save and protect and preserve Medicare for the future. I hope he will reconsider his bias against health care choices for seniors. That is a major part of what we tried to do.

I hope he will renounce his animus against the medical savings accounts. When I suggest to my senior citizens and even my mother about the idea of a medical savings account of your own, where you have it to use, or you do not have to use it, a novel idea, it is yours. It would help cut out some of the unnecessary use of the system. It is the American way. Let you choose, let you use your own money, let you save and get a little interest.

I do not know why the President was so opposed. Maybe he will reconsider. That could be the final catalyst that brings together a real budget agreement—not a deal, an agreement—that is good for America.

Well, maybe I should prepare for the worst, which would be yet another abdication of sensibly dealing with the problems of Medicare. We demonstrated that last year that we really could not, as a government, face up to it. This is not an issue we can walk away from. It is there. It is not good. It is going to get worse soon. There is too much at stake for 35 million Americans, the elderly, and the disabled, for whom Medicare is, quite literally, a lifeline.

It is time we put partisanship and politics aside and address the real problems for the future of Medicare, for our parents, and for our children.

I ask unanimous consent the New York Times article by Robert Pear be printed in the RECORD, entitled "Shortfall Posted by Medicare Fund Two Years Early."

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Feb. 5, 1996]

SHORTFALL POSTED BY MEDICARE FUND TWO YEARS EARLY

(By Robert Pear)

WASHINGTON, FEB. 4.—New Government data show that Medicare's Hospital Insurance Trust Fund lost money last year for the first time since 1972, suggesting that the financial condition of the Medicare program was worse than assumed by either Congress or the Clinton Administration.

In a report to Congress in April, the Administration estimated that the amount of money in the trust fund would increase by $4.7 billion in the 1995 fiscal year, which ended on Sept. 30. In fact, officials said in interviews, the balance in the trust fund fell by $35.7 million, to $129.5 billion.

"Things turned out a little worse than we expected," said Richard S. Foster, chief actuary of the Federal Health Care Financing Administration, which runs Medicare for 37 million people who are elderly or disabled. "We had projected that 1997 would be the first fiscal year with a deficit."

Income to the trust fund, primarily from payroll taxes, was slightly less than expected, Mr. Foster said, and outlays were somewhat higher. There were more hospital admissions than anticipated, patients were somewhat sicker and hospitals filed claims faster than expected, he said.

The deficit, while relatively small, is significant because once the trust fund starts to lose money, the losses are expected to grow from year to year. No tax increases are scheduled under current law, and Federal officials do not expect a reduction in the rate of growth in Medicare spending unless there is a budget deal between President Clinton and Congress.

No such deal is in sight. The two sides have not held serious negotiations in three weeks, and they evidently intend to fight out their philosophical differences in the November elections.

Moreover, neither party's proposals go far enough to guarantee the solvency of Medicare for the baby boom generation, whose members start to reach the age of 65 in 2011.

In general, health policy experts say, the changes needed to shore up Medicare can be relatively small and gradual if they are made in the near future, but they will have to be larger and more abrupt if they are deferred.

Bruce C. Vladeck, administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration, said: "We are still analyzing the Medicare data to see what last year's experience might say about changing patterns of care or need among the elderly. In-patient hospital volume went up a bit more than we had projected. We are trying to figure out why."

Officials at the American Hospital Association said the increase was puzzling because it followed more than a decade of decline in Medicare hospital admissions.

Donna E. Shalala, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, and three other Administration officials serve as trustees of Medicare. In the report in April, they said the hospital trust fund would run out of money late in the year 2002.

Republicans seized on that prediction to justify their proposals for vast changes in the structure of Medicare. They said they were cutting the growth of Medicare not to balance the budget, but to "preserve, protect and strengthen" the program. Mr. Clinton vetoed the proposals, saying they would hurt beneficiaries and "dismantle Medicare as we know it."

In view of the financial shortfall in 1995, the Hospital Insurance Trust Fund could go bankrupt earlier than anticipated, perhaps a year sooner, but that is not certain.

"It's hard to say what the implications are for future estimates," Mr. Foster said. "It's possible this could advance the depletion date, or the trust fund might be depleted earlier in the same year, 2002. In any event, it doesn't help. That's a safe conclusion."

The trustees and the actuary will make new forecasts in their next annual report, which under Federal law is to be submitted to Congress by April 1. The report may be a month late because of time lost while the Government was shut down in November and again in December.

The actuary and his staff write much of the trustees' report. Medicare actuaries have a tradition of independence and a history of providing objective information to Federal officials and Congress. This year's report will be closely scrutinized since it comes in an election year, when Medicare is an important campaign issue. Under Federal law, the chief actuary must certify whether the Administration's conclusions are based on reasonable assumptions and cost estimates.

Private employers have slowed the growth of health costs in recent years by prodding employees to join health maintenance organizations and other forms of managed care. While the number of Medicare beneficiaries in H.M.O.'s is growing rapidly, only about four million people, representing 11 percent of the beneficiaries, are in H.M.O's.

Medicare's Hospital Insurance Trust Fund pays for hospital care, skilled nursing homes, home health agencies and hospices. The trustees' report in April predicted that outlays would grow an average of 8 percent a year from 1995 to 2002, while income to the trust fund would grow 4 percent a year.

Referring to the disparity between income and outlays, Mr. Foster said: "This gap, which barely showed up in 1995, will grow in future years. In the absence of legislation, it will keep getting worse. Obviously, you can't continue very long with a situation in which the expenditures of the program are significantly greater than the income. We have enough assets to cover the shortfall in each of the next few years. But once the assets of the trust fund are depleted, there is no way to pay all the benefits that are due."

While Congress and the Administration recognize that Medicare is unsustainable in its current form, they disagree on the urgency of the problem. In 1993, President Clinton described a health care crisis, demanding transformation of the entire health care system. But last year, when the debate focused on Medicare, he expressed less alarm and resisted many Republican proposals, saying they would have "Draconian consequences for the elderly."

Doctor and laboratory bills are paid by a separate Medicare trust fund under Part B of the program. It is much smaller than the hospital trust fund and is financed in a different way, with beneficiary premiums and general revenues.

This separate Medical Insurance Trust Fund ended the fiscal year 1995 with a balance of $13.9 billion, which was $1.7 billion more than predicted; it is virtually impossible for this trust fund to run out of money because it has a sizable cushion and the premiums and matching Government contributions are adjusted each year to cover the expected costs.

Medicare outlays for doctors' services are rising faster than those for hospital care, in part because complex services once performed in hospitals are now often done in out-patient clinics and doctors' offices.

Mr. Clinton and the Republicans agree on many proposals to curb Medicare payments to hospitals, doctors and other health-care providers. But it appears unlikely that such cutbacks will be approved in the absence of a general agreement on how to balance the Federal budget.

"No deal is preferable to a bad deal," said Mr. Vladeck, the head of the health care financing agency, who expresses the Administration's views. "Everybody agrees on many things that could be done to save money and to make the Medicare program better. But we can't do them because members of the Congressional majority are unwilling to separate those items from their ideological agenda."

Repblicans, by contrast, say Mr. Clinton has thwarted their efforts to save the program from bankruptcy. Under their proposal, elderly people would have a range of health insurance options like those available to people under 65, and the Republicans assume that many would choose H.M.O.'s, which try to control costs by providing comprehensive care in return for flat monthly premiums.

Mr. LOTT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOTT). Without objection, it is so ordered.

BOSNIA

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I will take a couple minutes to compliment the Senator from Mississippi, the distinguished majority whip presiding in the chair at the moment, for the comments just made, both to clear the record with respect to what we have been doing in January and February and to make a very important point with regard to Medicare. I would rather be home now in Arizona where it is over 80 degrees, than back here in Washington, DC, but this morning we are working on very important immigration reform legislation, which is very important in my State, and important to the entire country. Under the leadership of the Senator from Wyoming, Senator SIMPSON, and Senator HATCH, and others I think we will be able to get that legislation. It is taking a lot of time to put it together in the way we can get it adopted. As a result, we have to be here working.

The other point I want to make relates to a recent trip that I took to Bosnia, visiting with NATO officials in Munich, Germany, after that trip. As a result of this, I have come to a rather disturbing conclusion, and that is, I do not think the NATO forces, the United States included, have our act together in anything other than a military sense.

As one would expect, our troops are performing magnificently. We defined the mission narrowly: Stop the fighting parties from fighting with each other. Once the U.S. military moved in, nobody wanted to mess with them. Our troops, well trained, well equipped, well motivated, are performing just like all of us would expect them to. It really makes you proud to see them performing there, in addition, in a rainy, muddy, snowy, icy climate far away from home, where there is no clear-cut idea why they are there, but they are doing their mission and doing it well.

They have the fighting forces separated, and I do not think the Bosnians or Serbs or Croats are going to mess with either our forces or the British or the French forces and the other nations under their command.

What is not happening is that the European countries are not coming together to solve the political problems, the economic problems, the rebuilding of the infrastructure, the ensuring that the Bosnian Army is well enough equipped and armed to defend itself—all of the things that need to occur to make this peace treaty really work are being ignored by the Europeans. I know that is a harsh statement to make, but in the 2 days following our trip to Bosnia, a group of six members of the United States Senate, as well as Defense Secretary Perry and other United States officials, visited with our European allies and repeatedly asked the question: Are you going to help fund the economic reconstruction of the country, the infrastructure that needs to be rebuilt, if are you going to help get the government back on its feet? Will you lend a hand to us in arming the Bosnian Government so it can defend itself when we leave?

Essentially, we got the cold shoulder. They do not want to talk about it. It requires money and requires a commitment.

They want to pat themselves on the back for the military operation which is succeeding well and not get to the hard business of making the peace work in Bosnia. My concern with going into Bosnia is not that we would not be able to succeed militarily, but this is an insufficient commitment on the part of the Europeans to follow through and make peace work. That is what we have seen.

This morning's wire, Mr. President, contains a very disturbing story. In an ominous sign from the AP wire story, "Bosnian Serbs followed through today on their threat to sever with the NATO-led peace force ties because of the government's arrest of two Serb officers at suspected war criminals."

They lost all top level contact with the Bosnian Serb Army and the ground commander said it was the worst crisis in Bosnia since the peace took hold 2 months ago.

"The commander, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Walker, characterized the development as an ominous sign and direct breach of the Bosnian peace accord."

At the same time, I note that the Chairman of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff, John Shalikashvili, urged the Bosnian Government to immediately release Serbs against whom there is no evidence of participating in war crimes.

Does that mean the two people arrested are being held? Very unclear. There is a total lack of cohesion because there has not been an agreement by the NATO allied forces of exactly what we are supposed to be doing over there, except keeping the warring sides from fighting with each other.

There is an absolute commitment to leave in the year. The Europeans say they will leave when we leave. When we are out of Bosnia next October, I can only hope that the Europeans have gotten together and have made a stronger commitment than they have so far to help rebuild that economy and that government and to deal with the war crimes issue and the arming of the Bosnian Government so that when we leave all we accomplished will not have been for nothing. I especially have reference to one U.S. death and other U.S. casualties.

I want to be able to say, when this is over with, that they did not die in vain. I am afraid if we do not get more cooperation from our European allies, that we will not be able to say that, and that will be a very, very big shame and a blot on the United States as well as our European allies.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Thomas, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

REPORT ON THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO IRAQ—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 118

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

To the Congress of the United States:

I hereby report to the Congress on the developments since my last report on August 1, 1995, concerning the national emergency with respect to Iraq that was declared in Executive Order No. 12722 of August 2, 1990. This report is submitted pursuant to section 401(c) of the National Emergencies Act, 50 U.S.C. 1641(c), and section 204(c) of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act, 50 U.S.C. 1703(c).

Executive Order No. 12722 ordered the immediate blocking of all property and interests in property of the Government of Iraq (including the Central Bank of Iraq) then or thereafter located in the United States or within the possession or control of a U.S. person. That order also prohibited the importation into the United States of goods and services of Iraqi origin, as well as the exportation of goods, services, and technology from the United States to Iraq. The order prohibited travel-related transactions to or from Iraq and the performance of any contract in support of any industrial, commercial, or governmental project in Iraq. U.S. persons were also prohibited from granting or extending credit or loans to the Government of Iraq.

The foregoing prohibitions (as well as the blocking of Government of Iraq property) were continued and augmented on August 9, 1990, by Executive Order No. 12724, which was issued in order to align the sanctions imposed by the United States with United Nations Security Council Resolution 661 of August 6, 1990.

Executive Order No. 12817 was issued on October 21, 1992, to implement in the United States measures adopted in United Nations Security Council Resolution 778 of October 2, 1992. Resolution 778 requires U.N. Member States to transfer to a U.N. escrow account any funds (up to $200 million apiece) representing Iraqi oil sale proceeds paid by purchasers after the imposition of U.N. sanctions on Iraq, to finance Iraq's obligations for U.N. activities with respect to Iraq, such as expenses to verify Iraqi weapons destruction, and to provide humanitarian assistance in Iraq on a nonpartisan basis. A portion of the escrowed funds also funds the activities of the U.N. Compensation Commission in Geneva, which handles claims from victims of the Iraqi invasion and occupation of Kuwait. Member States also may make voluntary contributions to the account. The funds placed in the escrow account are to be returned, with interest, to the Member States that transferred them to the United Nations, as funds are received from future sales of Iraqi oil authorized by the U.N. Security Council. No Member State is required to fund more than half of the total transfers or contributions to the escrow account.

This report discusses only matters concerning the national emergency with respect to Iraq that was declared in Executive Order No. 12722 and matters relating to Executive Orders No. 12724 and 12817 (the "Executive orders"). The report covers events from August 2, 1995, through February 1, 1996.

1. During the reporting period, there were no amendments to the Iraqi Sanctions Regulations.

2. The Department of the Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control (FAC) continues its involvement in lawsuits seeking to prevent the unauthorized transfer of blocked Iraqi assets. In Consarc Corporation v. Iraqi Ministry of Industry and Minerals, No. 94-5390 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 15, 1995), the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit issued its second opinion in this case, finding in FAC's favor on all issues presented to the court. The court ordered the district court judge to direct Consarc Corporation to restore the status quo by returning $6.4 million plus interest to the blocked Iraqi government account from which it was withdrawn after the district court erroneously held that these funds were not blocked Iraqi government property. The court also found that the unsold furnace manufactured for the Iraqi government and sales proceeds of a second furnace were blocked property. Finally, the court reversed the district court's ruling that Consarc held a specific claim against a blocked Iraqi government account for $6.4 million, holding that any claim Consarc had against the Government of Iraq was as a general creditor only.

Investigations of possible violations of the Iraqi sanctions continue to be pursued and appropriate enforcement actions taken. Several cases from prior reporting periods are continuing and recent additional allegations have been referred by FAC to the U.S. Customs Service for investigation. Additional FAC civil penalty notices were prepared during the reporting period for violations of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act and Iraqi Sanctions Regulations with respect to transactions involving Iraq. On de minimis penalty has been collected from an organization for unlicensed exports in violation of the prohibitions against transactions involving Iraq. Several other penalty proceedings are pending completion.

3. Investigation also continues into the roles played by various individuals and firms outside Iraq in the Iraqi government procurement network. These investigations may lead to additions to FAC's listing of individuals and organizations determined to be Specially Designated Nationals (SDNs) of the Government of Iraq.

4. Pursuant to Executive Order No. 12817 implementing United Nations Security Council Resolution 778, on October 26, 1992, FAC directed the Federal Reserve Bank of New York to establish a blocked account for receipt of certain post-August 6, 1990, Iraqi oil sales proceeds, and to hold, invest, and transfer these funds as required by the order. On September 5, 1995, following payments by the Governments of Australia ($216,350.00), Denmark ($168,985.00), Japan ($4,075,000.00), The Netherlands ($4,168,745.47), New Zealand ($67,050.00), Switzerland ($265,108.20), and by the European Union ($647,463.31), respectively, to the special United Nations-controlled account, entitled, "United Nations Security Council Resolution 778 Escrow Account," the Federal Reserve Bank of New York was directed to transfer a corresponding amount of $9,606,711.98 from the blocked account it holds to the United Nations-controlled account. Similarly, on October 30, 1995, following the payment of $1,504,000.00 by the European Community, and payments by the Governments of Germany ($355,871.89), The Netherlands ($2,698,348.13), Norway ($199,983.00), and the United Kingdom ($2,188,992.67), the Federal Reserve Bank of New York was directed to transfer a corresponding amount of $6,947,195.69 to the United Nations-controlled account. Finally, on December 21, 1995, following the payment of $3,062,197.28 by the European Union, and payments by the Governments of the Netherlands ($1,922,719.00), Sweden ($4,223,178.20), and the United Kingdom ($208,600.44), the Federal Reserve Bank of New York was directed to transfer the amount of $8,313,066.13 to the United Nations-controlled account. Cumulative transfers from the blocked Federal Reserve Bank of New York account since issuance of Executive Order No. 12817 now have amounted to $200 million, fully satisfying the U.S. commitment to match the payments of other Member States from blocked Iraqi oil payments, and its obligations pursuant to United Nations Security Council Resolution 778.

5. The Office of Foreign Assets Control has issued a total of 618 specific licenses regarding transactions pertaining to Iraq or Iraqi assets since August 1990. Licenses have been issued for transactions such as the filing of legal actions against Iraqi governmental entities, legal representation of Iraq, and the exportation to Iraq of donated medicine, medical supplies, food intended for humanitarian relief purposes, the execution of powers of attorney relating to the administration of personal assets and decedents' estates in Iraq and the protection of preexistent intellectual property rights in Iraq. Since my last report, 28 specific licenses have been issued.

6. The expenses incurred by the Federal Government in the 6-month period from August 2, 1995, through February 1, 1996, that are directly attributable to the exercise of powers and authorities conferred by the declaration of a national emergency with respect to Iraq are reported to be about $1.6 million, most of which represents wage and salary costs for Federal personnel. Personnel costs were largely centered in the Department of the Treasury (particularly in the Office of Foreign Assets Control, the U.S. Customs Service, the Office of the Under Secretary for Enforcement, and the Office of the General Counsel), the Department of State (particularly the Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs, the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs, the Bureau of International Organization Affairs, the Bureau of Political-Military Affairs, the U.S. Mission to the United Nations, and the Office of the Legal Adviser), and the Department of Transportation (particularly the U.S. Coast Guard).

7. The United States imposed economic sanctions on Iraq in response to Iraq's illegal invasion and occupation of Kuwait, a clear act of brutal aggression. The United States, together with the international community, is maintaining economic sanctions against Iraq because the Iraqi regime has failed to comply fully with the United Nations Security Council resolutions. Security Council resolutions on Iraq call for the elimination of Iraqi weapons of mass destruction, Iraqi recognition of Kuwait, and the inviolability of the Iraq-Kuwait boundary, the release of Kuwaiti and other third-country nationals, compensation for victims of Iraqi aggression, long-term monitoring of weapons of mass destruction capabilities, the return of Kuwaiti assets stolen during Iraq's illegal occupation of Kuwait, renunciation of terrorism, an end to internal Iraqi repression of its own Iraqi civilian population, and the facilitation of access of international relief organizations to all those in need in all parts of Iraq. More than 5 years after the invasion, a pattern of defiance persists: a refusal to account for missing Kuwaiti detainees; failure to return Kuwaiti property worth millions of dollars, including military equipment that was used by Iraq in its movement of troops to the Kuwaiti border in October 1994; sponsorship of assassinations in Lebanon and in northern Iraq; incomplete declarations to weapons inspectors; and ongoing widespread human rights violations. As a result, the U.N. sanctions remain in place; the United States will continue to enforce those sanctions under domestic authority.

The Baghdad government continues to violate basic human rights of its own citizens through systematic repression of minorities and denial of humanitarian assistance. The Government of Iraq has repeatedly said it will not be bound by United Nations Security Council Resolution 688. For more than 4 years, Baghdad has maintained a blockade of food, medicine, and other humanitarian supplies against northern Iraq. The Iraqi military routinely harasses residents of the north, and has attempted to "Arabize" the Kurdish, Turcomen, and Assyrian areas in the north. Iraq has not relented in its artillery attacks against civilian population centers in the south, or in its burning and draining operations in the southern marshes, which have forced thousands to flee to neighboring States.

In April 1995, the U.N. Security Council adopted Resolution 986 authorizing Iraq to export limited quantities of oil (up to $1 billion per quarter) under U.N. supervision in order to finance the purchase of food, medicine, and other humanitarian supplies. The resolution includes arrangements to ensure equitable distribution of such assistance to all the people of Iraq. The resolution also provides for the payment of compensation to victims of Iraqi aggression and for the funding of other U.N. activities with respect to Iraq. Resolution 986 was carefully crafted to address the issues raised by Iraq to justify its refusal to implement similar humanitarian resolutions adopted in 1991 (Resolutions 706 and 712), such as oil export routes and questions of national sovereignty. Nevertheless, Iraq refused to implement this humanitarian measure. This only reinforces our view that Saddam Hussein is unconcerned about the hardships suffered by the Iraqi people.

The policies and actions of the Saddam Hussein regime continue to pose an unusual and extraordinary threat to the national security and foreign policy of the United States, as well as to regional peace and security. The U.N. resolutions affirm that the Security Council be assured of Iraq's peaceful intentions in judging its compliance with sanctions. Because of Iraq's failure to comply fully with these resolutions, the United States will continue to apply economic sanctions to deter it from threatening peace and stability in the region.

REPORT ON THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO THE MIDDLE EAST PEACE PROCESS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 119

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

To the Congress of the United States:

I hereby report to the Congress on the developments concerning the national emergency with respect to organizations that threaten to disrupt the Middle East peace process that was declared in Executive Order No. 12947 of January 23, 1995. This report is submitted pursuant to section 401(c) of the National Emergencies Act, 50 U.S.C. 1641(c), and section 204(c) of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act (IEEPA), 50 U.S.C. 1703(c).

1. On January 23, 1995, I signed Executive Order 12947, "Prohibiting Transactions with Terrorists Who Threaten to Disrupt the Middle East Peace Process" (the "order") (60 Fed. Reg. 5079, January 25, 1995). The order blocks all property subject to U.S. jurisdiction in which there is any interest of 12 terrorist organizations that threaten the Middle East peace process as identified in an Annex to the order. The order also blocks the property and interests in property subject to U.S. jurisdiction of persons designated by the Secretary of State, in coordination with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General, who are found (1) to have committed, or to pose a significant risk of committing, acts of violence that have the purpose or effect of disrupting the Middle East peace process, or (2) to assist in, sponsor or provide financial, material, or technological support for, or services in support of, such acts of violence. In addition, the order blocks all property and interests in property subject to U.S. jurisdiction in which there is any interest of persons determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, in coordination with the Secretary of State and the Attorney General, to be owned or controlled by, or to act for or on behalf of, any other person designated pursuant to the order (collectively "Specially Designated Terrorists" or "SDTs").

The order further prohibits any transaction or dealing by a United States person or within the United States in property or interests in property of SDTs, including the making or receiving of any contribution of funds, goods, or services to or for the benefit of such persons. This prohibition includes donations that are intended to relieve human suffering.

Designations of persons blocked pursuant to the order are effective upon the date of determination by the Secretary of State or his delegate, or the Director of the Office of Foreign Assets Control (FAC) acting under authority delegated by the Secretary of the Treasury. Public notice of blocking is effective upon the date of filing with the Federal Register, or upon prior actual notice.

2. On January 25, 1995, the Department of the Treasury issued a notice listing persons blocked pursuant to Executive Order No. 12947 who have been designated by the President as terrorist organizations threatening the Middle East peace process or who have been found to be owned or controlled by, or to be acting for or on behalf of, these terrorist organizations (60 Fed. Reg. 5084, January 25, 1995). The notice identified 31 entities that act for or on behalf of the 12 Middle East terrorist organizations listed in the Annex to Executive Order No. 12947, as well as 18 individuals who are leaders or representatives of these groups. In addition the notice provides 9 name variations or pseudonyms used by the 18 individuals identified. The list identifies blocked persons who have been found to have committed, or to pose a risk of committing, acts of violence that have the purpose of disrupting the Middle East peace process or to have assisted in, sponsored, or provided financial, material or technological support for, or service in support of, such acts of violence, or are owned or controlled by, or to act for or on behalf of other blocked persons. The Department of the Treasury issued three additional notices adding the names of three individuals, as well as their pseudonyms, to the List of SDTs (60 Fed. Reg. 41152–53, August 11, 1995; 60 Fed. Reg. 44932–33, August 29, 1995; and 60 Fed. Reg. 58435–36, November 27, 1995). Copies of the notices are attached to this report. The FAC, in coordination with the Secretary of State and the Attorney General, is continuing to expand the list of Specially Designated Terrorists, including both organizations and individuals, as additional information is developed.

3. The expenses incurred by the Federal Government in the 6-month period from July 23, 1995, through January 22, 1996, that are directly attributable to the exercise of powers and authorities conferred by the declaration of the national emergency with respect to organizations that disrupt the Middle East peace process are estimated at approximately $2.6 million. (The expenses for the previous period, incorrectly stated in the report of July 27, 1995, to be approximately $55,000, were about $2.5 million.) Personnel costs were largely centered in the Department of the Treasury (particularly in the Office of Foreign Assets Control, the Office of the General Counsel, and the U.S. Customs Service), the Department of State, and the Department of Justice.

4. Executive Order No. 12947 provides this Administration with a new tool for combating fundraising in this country on behalf of organizations that use terror to undermine the Middle East peace process. The order makes it harder for such groups to finance these criminal activities by cutting off their access to sources of support in the United States and to U.S. financial facilities. It is also intended to reach charitable contributions to designated organizations and individuals to preclude diversion of such donations to terrorist activities.

In addition, the Congress has pending before it comprehensive counterterrorism legislation proposed by the Administration that would strengthen our ability to prevent terrorist acts, identify those who carry them out, and bring them to justice. The combination of Executive Order No. 12947 and the proposed legislation demonstrate the U.S. determination to confront and combat those who would seek to destroy the Middle East peace process, and our commitment to the global fight against terrorism.

I shall continue to exercise the powers at my disposal to apply economic sanctions against extremists seeking to destroy the hopes of peaceful coexistence between Arabs and Israelis as long as these measures are appropriate, and will continue to report periodically to the Congress on significant developments pursuant to 50 U.S.C. 1703(c).

REPORT WITH RESPECT TO JAPAN—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 121

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

To the Congress of the United States:

On December 11, 1995, Secretary of Commerce Ronald Brown certified under section 8 of the Fishermen's Protective Act of 1967, as amended (the "Pelly Amendment") (22 U.S.C. 1978), that Japan has conducted research whaling activities that diminish the effectiveness of the International Whaling Commission (IWC) conservation program. This message constitutes my report to the Congress pursuant to subsection (b) of the Pelly Amendment.

The certification of the Secretary of Commerce was based on Japanese research whaling activities in both the North Pacific and the Southern Ocean Whale Sanctuary. In 1994, Japan expanded its research whaling activities into the North Pacific by permitting the taking of 100 minke whales, 21 of which were taken. The IWC found that this North Pacific whaling failed to satisfy applicable criteria for lethal research and was therefore inconsistent with the IWC's conservation program. Nevertheless, Japan continued its whaling activities in the North Pacific, taking 100 minke whales in 1995. In addition, during 1995, Japan increased the number of minke whales to be harvested in the Southern Ocean Whale Sanctuary by 33 percent, despite a 1994 finding by the IWC that this lethal research program did not meet all applicable criteria.

In his letter to me of December 11, 1995, Secretary Brown conveyed his concerns not only over the whales that have been killed in this program to date but also over any further expansion of lethal research. While noting that the Japanese have informed us they have no plans for a further expansion of lethal research in the Southern Ocean Whale Sanctuary, he expressed particular concern over whaling activity in that area. I share these concerns.

At this stage, I do not believe that the use of trade sanctions is the most constructive approach to resolving our differences over research whaling activities with the Government of Japan. However, I have instructed the Department of State to convey my very strong concerns to the Government of Japan. We will also vigorously pursue high-level efforts to persuade Japan to reduce the number of whales killed in its research program and act consistently with the IWC conservation program. We hope to achieve significant progress on these issues by the beginning of the next Antarctic whaling season and will keep these issues under review. I have instructed the Department of Commerce to continue to monitor closely Japan's research whaling and to report promptly on any further inconsistencies between Japanese whaling activities and the guidelines of the IWC conservation program.

WILLIAM J. CLINTON.

TELECOMMUNICATION LEGISLATION

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, last week, the Congress passed telecommunications legislation. The President signed it into law this week. For a number of reasons, and I stated them in the Chamber at the time, I voted against the legislation. There were a number of things in that legislation I liked and I am glad to see them in law. There were, however, some parts I did not like, one of them especially. Today I am introducing a bill to repeal parts of the new law, parts I feel would have far-reaching implications and would impose far-reaching new Federal crimes on Americans for exercising their free speech rights on-line and on the Internet.

The parts of the telecommunications bill called the Communications Decency Act are fatally flawed and unconstitutional. Indeed, such serious questions about the constitutionality of this legislation have been raised that a new section was added to speed up judicial review to see if the legislation would pass constitutional muster. The legislation is not going to pass that test.

The first amendment to our Constitution expressly states that "Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech." The new law flouts that prohibition for the sake of political posturing. We should not wait to let the courts fix this mistake. Even on an expedited basis, the judicial review of the new law would take months and possibly years of litigation. During those years of litigation unsuspecting Americans who are using the Internet in unprecedented numbers and more every day, are going to risk criminal liability every time they go on-line.

Let us be emphatically clear that the people at risk of committing a felony under this new law are not child pornographers, purveyors of obscene materials, or child sex molesters. These people can already be prosecuted and should be prosecuted under longstanding Federal criminal laws that prevent the distribution over computer networks of obscene and other pornographic materials harmful to minors, under 18 U.S.C. sections 1465, 2252 and 2423(a); that prohibit the illegal solicitation of a minor by way of a computer network, under 18 U.S.C. section 2252; and that bar the illegal luring of a minor into sexual activity through computer conversations, under 18 U.S.C. section 2423(b). In fact, just last year, we passed unanimously a new law that sharply increases penalties for people who commit these crimes.

There is absolutely no disagreement in the Senate, no disagreement certainly among the 100 Senators about wanting to protect children from harm. All 100 Senators, no matter where they are from, would agree that obscenity and child pornography should be kept out of the hands of children. All Senators agree that we should punish those who sexually exploit children or abuse children. I am a former prosecutor. I have prosecuted people for abusing children. This is something where there are no political or ideological differences among us.

I believe there was a terribly misguided effort to protect children from what some prosecutors somewhere in this country might consider offensive or indecent online material, and in doing that, the Communications Decency Act tramples on the free speech rights of all Americans who want to enjoy this medium.

This legislation sweeps more broadly than just stopping obscenity from being sent to children. It will impose felony penalties for using indecent four-letter words, or discussing material deemed to be indecent, on electronic bulletin boards or Internet chat areas and news groups accessible to children.

Let me give a couple of examples: You send e-mail back and forth, and you want to annoy somebody whom you talked with many times before—it may be your best buddy—and you use a four-letter word. Well, you could be prosecuted for that, although you could pick up the phone, say the same thing to him, and you commit no crime; or send a letter and say the same word and commit no crime; or talk to him walking down the street and commit no crime.

To avoid liability under this legislation, users of e-mail will have to ban curse words and other expressions that might be characterized as indecent from their online vocabulary.

The new law will punish with 2-year jail terms someone using one of the seven dirty words in a message to a minor or for sharing with a minor material containing indecent passages. In some areas of the country, a copy of Seventeen magazine would be considered indecent, even though kids buy it. The magazine is among the 10 most frequently challenged school library materials in the country. Somebody sends an excerpt from it, and bang, they could be prosecuted.

The new law will make it a crime "to display in a manner available to" a child any message or material "that, in context, depicts or describes, in terms patently offensive as measured by contemporary community standards, sexual or excretory activities or organs * * *" That covers any of the over 13,000 Usenet discussion groups, as well as electronic bulletin boards, online service provider chat rooms, and Web sites, that are all accessible to children.

This display prohibition, according to the drafters, "applies to content providers who post indecent material for online display without taking precautions that shield that material from minors."

What precautions will Internet users have to take to avoid criminal liability? These users, after all, are the ones who provide the "content" read in news groups and on electronic bulletin boards. The legislation gives the FCC authority to describe the precautions that can be taken to avoid criminal liability. All Internet users will have to wait and look to the FCC for what they must do to protect themselves from criminal liability.

Internet users will have to limit all language used and topics discussed in online discussions accessible to minors to that appropriate for kindergartners, just in case a child clicks onto the discussion. No literary quotes from racy parts of "Catcher in the Rye" or "Ulysses" will be allowed. Certainly, online discussions of safe sex practices, or birth control methods, and of AIDS prevention methods will be suspect. Any user who crosses the vague and undefined line of "indecency" will be subject to 2 years in jail and fines.

This worries me considerably. I will give you an idea of what happens. People look at this, and because it is so vague and so broad and so sweeping, attempts to protect one's self from breaking the law become even broader and even more sweeping.

A few weeks ago, America Online took the online profile of a Vermonter off the service. Why? Because the Vermonter used what AOL deemed a vulgar, forbidden word. The word—and I do not want to shock my colleagues—but the word was "breast." And the reason this Vermonter was using the word "breast"? She was a survivor of breast cancer. She used the service to exchange the latest information on detection of breast cancer or engage in support to those who are survivors of breast cancer. Of course, eventually, America Online apologized and indicated they would allow the use of the word where appropriate.

We are already seeing premonitions of the chilling effect this legislation will have on online service providers. Far better we use the laws on the books today to go after child pornographers, to go after child abusers.

What strikes some people as indecent or patently offensive may look very different to other people in another part of the country. Given these differences, a vague ban on patently offensive and indecent communications may make us feel good but threatens to drive off the Internet and computer networks an unimaginable amount of valuable political, artistic, scientific, health and other speech.

For example, many museums in this country and abroad are going high-technology and starting Web pages to provide the public with greater access to the cultural riches they offer. What if museums, like the Whitney Museum, which currently operates a Web page, had to censor what it made available online out of fear of being dragged into court? Only adults and kids who can make it in person to the museum will be able to see the paintings or sculpture censored for online viewing under this law.

What about the university health service that posts information online about birth control and protections against the spread of AIDS? With many students in college under 18, this information would likely disappear under threat of prosecution.

What happens if they are selling online versions of James Joyce's "Ulysses" or of "Catcher in the Rye"? Can they advertise this? Can excerpts be put online? In all likelihood not. The Internet is breaking new ground important for the economic health of this country. Businesses, like the Golden Quill Book Shop in Manchester Center, VT, can advertise and sell their books around the country or the world via the Internet. But now, advertisers will have to censor their ads.

For example, some people consider the Victoria's Secret catalogue indecent. Under this new law, advertisements that would be legal in print could subject the advertiser to criminal liability if circulated online. You could put them in your local newspaper, but you cannot put it online.

In bookstores and on library shelves, the protections of the first amendment are clear. The courts are unwavering in the protection of indecent speech. In altering the protections of the first amendment for online communications, I believe you could cripple this new mode of communication.

At some point you have to start asking, where do we censor? What speech do we keep off? Is it speech we may find politically disturbing? If somebody wants to be critical of any one Member of Congress, are we able to keep that off? Should we be able to keep that off? I think not. There is a lot of reprehensible speech and usually it becomes more noted when attempts are made to censor it rather than let it out in the daylight where people can respond to it.

The Internet is an American technology that has swept around the world. As its popularity has grown, so have efforts to censor it. For example, complaints by German prosecutors prompted an online service provider to cut off subscriber access to over 200 Internet news groups with the words "sex," "gay," or "erotica" in the name. They censored such groups as "clarinet.news.gays," which is an online newspaper focused on gay issues, and "gay-net.coming-out," which is a support group for gay men and women dealing with going public with their sexual orientation.

German prosecutors have also tried to get AOL to stop providing access to neo-Nazi propaganda accessible on the Internet. No doubt such material is offensive and abhorrent, but nonetheless just as protected by our first amendment as indecent material.

In China, look what they are trying to do. They are trying to create an intranet that would heavily censor outside access to the worldwide Internet. We ought to make sure it is open, not censored. We ought to send that out as an example to China.

Americans should be taking the high ground to protect the future of our home-grown Internet, and to fight these censorship efforts that are springing up around the globe. Instead of championing the first amendment, however, the Communications Decency Act tramples on the principles of free speech and free flow of information that has fueled the growth of this medium.

We have to be vigilant in enforcing the laws we have on the books to protect our children from obscenity, child pornography, and sexual exploitation. Those laws are being enforced. Just last September, using current laws, the FBI seized computers and computer files from about 125 homes and offices across the country as part of an operation to shut down an online child pornography ring.

I well understand the motivation for the Communications Decency Act. We want to protect our children from offensive or indecent online materials. This Senator—and I am confident every other Senator—agrees with that. But we must be careful that the means we use to protect our children does not do more harm than good. We can already control the access our children have to indecent material with blocking technologies available for free from some online service providers and for a relatively low cost from software manufacturers.

Frankly, and I will close with this, Mr. President, at some point we ought to stop saying the Government is going to make a determination of what we read and see, the Government will determine what our children have or do not have.

I grew up in a family where my parents thought it was their responsibility to guide what I read or would not read. They probably had their hands full. I was reading at the age of 4. I was a voracious reader, and all the time I was growing up I read several books a week and went through our local library in the small town I grew up in very quickly. That love of reading has stood me in very good stead. I am sure I read some things that were a total waste of time, but very quickly I began to determine what were the good things to read and what were the bad things. I had read all of Dickens by the end of the third grade and much of Robert Louis Stevenson. I am sure some can argue there are parts of those that maybe were not suitable for somebody in third grade. I do not think I was severely damaged by it at all. That same love of reading helped me get through law school and become a prosecutor where I did put child abusers behind bars.

Should we not say that the parents ought to make this decision, not us in the Congress? We should put some responsibility back on families, on parents. They have the software available that they can determine what their children are looking at. That is what we should do. Banning indecent material from the Internet is like using a meat cleaver to deal with the problems better addressed with a scalpel.

We should not wait for the courts. Let us get this new unconstitutional law off the books as soon as possible.

My Mr. HATCH (for himself, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. SIMPSON, and Mr. D'AMATO):

S. 1568. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide for the extension of certain expiring provisions; to the Committee on Finance.

EXTENSION OF EXPIRED TAX PROVISIONS LEGISLATION

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am pleased today to join with my friends and colleagues, Senator BAUCUS, Senator SIMPSON, and Senator D'AMATO, in introducing legislation that would extend certain expired tax provisions that have been delayed by the recent budget impasse. If no action is taken, the current tax treatment for individuals who accept educational benefits from their employer or donate stock to a charitable foundation will disappear as well as the tax incentives for companies who hire disadvantaged employees and invest heavily in research and development, orphan drug research, and alternative fuel research. These items are noncontroversial and have consistently enjoyed bipartisan support. However, because President Clinton vetoed the balanced budget of 1995, which included these extensions, these much-needed provisions need immediate attention inasmuch as April 15 is quickly approaching. Both individuals and businesses are anxiously awaiting the extension of these expired provisions so they will be able to pay their anticipated tax bill.

Mr. President, this bill would ensure continued opportunity for Americans. The termination of one of these provisions—the employer-provided educational assistance program—would end the hopes of thousands to attend college in order to enhance their job opportunities. This program has been well-established as an alternative way for individuals to meet their long-range educational goals. Without this extension, an estimated 800,000 Americans would be required to pay taxes on the education expenses paid by employers who did not withhold for the 1995 tax year because they counted on Congress to extend this program. Companies have already reported a significant drop in program participation because employees would be unable to pay the anticipated additional taxes. Without this exclusion, education becomes too expensive for many and the future promise embodied by it often slips away.

Not only will educational goals be defeated if these expired provisions are not extended, but programs that contribute to economic growth and long-term job creation will also be eliminated as research incentives dissipate. Many high-technology industries rely on the research and experimentation tax credit to make the development of new products economically feasible. Without this credit, they would be forced to either reduce the amount of their research or relocate to a country with research-friendly tax policies. In the end, the people of the United States would pay the price for our negligence in not extending this tax credit. They would be the ones without the high-technology, high paying jobs. They would be the ones who would suffer from a research deficit. And they would be the ones who had to live in a country with a less than robust economy.

As this extender package focuses on job creation for the high-technology industries, it also creates incentives for businesses to hire high-risk employees through the work opportunities tax credit [WOTC]. This program helps remove individuals from the more costly government assistant programs and provides them with jobs that allow them to both learn and earn.

Mr. President, some of my colleagues will correctly note that this bill includes no offset to pay for the lost revenue of extending these expired tax provisions. However, when these items were introduced as a small portion of the balanced budget of 1995, they were an important part of a complete package that placed this Nation on a path to fiscal responsibility. Thus, in the context of a complete balanced budget deal, the cost of these provisions are offset by the necessary spending cuts. This bill has been carved out of the larger piece of legislation because time constraints require that we must now focus attention on the immediacy of this issue. While all of the tax provisions in the Balanced Budget Act of 1995 are important and need to be addressed in comprehensive legislation, the items singled out in this bill are those that will have a direct impact on tax returns that are due this spring. As the sponsor of the balanced budget amendment, I certainly recognize the need to enact these provisions in a way that will not increase the deficit. And, I remain hopeful that Congress will pass an effective and responsible budget bill, including these and other vital tax provisions, that the President will sign. We look forward to working with Chairman ROTH of the Finance Committee and Senator DOMENICI of the Budget Committee in crafting a revenue neutral package that would include these provisions.

Mr. President, these programs are specifically designed to target individuals and businesses in a way that will produce benefits for the American economy. History has proven that high employment rates, educational opportunities, and intensive research are goals that we can agree on. It is important that we see this bill enacted in a timely matter so that our Nation will feel the effects of this legislation. Individuals and businesses alike have anticipated the renewal of these provisions. Congress has extended them in the past, and should have extended them in the 1995 budget agreement. Failure to do so now could have serious repercussions. I note that similar legislation will be introduced in the House by Representatives NANCY JOHNSON and ROBERT MATSUI. I urge all of my colleagues to support this bill.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and a summary of its provisions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROVISIONS OF THE EXTENDER BILL

All the tax provisions in this legislation are extended until 12/31/97 so that they will be protected through the fundamental tax reform debate that is sure to ensue in this election year.

1. Work Opportunities Tax Credit [WOTC], formerly TJTC:

This program is not as flexible as the original TJTC. However, this bill expands it from the limited version that was included in the Balanced Budget Act of 1995, as follows:

The categories have been expanded to include qualified summer youth who live with families dependent on food stamps and 18–25 year olds who live with families dependent on food stamps.

The hour requirement for the minimum employment period was reduced from the 500 hours included in the Balanced Budget Act of 1995 to 250 hours.

2. Employer-Provided Educational Assistance Program:

This program remains the same as the version included in the Balanced Budget Act, but this legislation does not limit the provision to undergraduate education.

3. Research and Experimentation Tax Credit:

This bill extends the research and experimentation credit as included in the Balanced Budget Act by incorporating an Alternative Increment Research Credit as well as an adjustment for start-up companies (the notch baby issue).

4. Orphan Drug Tax Credit:

This bill extends the research credit for rare diseases and allows the carryforward or carryback of unused credit, as included in the Balanced Budget Act of 1995.

5. Contributions of Stock to Private Foundation:

Extends existing law to December 31, 1997.

6. Extension of Binding Contract Date for the Section 29 Credit:

Extends the placed-in-service date to January 1, 1999, and the binding contract date to July 1, 1997.

7. Publicly Traded Partnerships:

Extends grandfathered PTPs as regular partnerships until December 31, 1997.

8. Group Legal Services:

This bill extends the program included in the Senate version of the Balanced Budget Act of 1995 until December 31, 1997.

• Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am very pleased to join my distinguished colleagues, Senators HATCH, BAUCUS, and SIMPSON, in introducing legislation to extend certain expiring tax provisions. Over the years, all of the provisions in this bill have received support from most Members of Congress. In the first session of this Congress, I joined Senator HATCH in cosponsoring legislation to extend the tax benefits on a number of these provisions. In addition, on June 29, 1995, I introduced S. 997 to permanently reinstate the tax exclusion for employer-provided group legal services. I am very pleased that that provision has been included in this bill.

Mr. President, this bill is an important and necessary piece of legislation. As such, I urge my colleagues to join us in the effort to extend these important benefits.•

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 42—CONCERNING THE EMANCIPATION OF THE IRANIAN BAHA'I COMMUNITY

Mrs. KASSEBAUM (for herself, Mr. DODD, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. MACK, Mr. D'AMATO, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. SIMON, Mr. GLENN, Mr. COHEN, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. PELL, Mr. COCHRAN, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. KOHL, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. HELMS, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. CHAFEE, and Mr. GRASSLEY) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 42

Whereas in 1982, 1984, 1988, 1990, 1992, and 1994 the Congress, by concurrent resolution, declared that it holds the Government of Iran responsible for upholding the rights of all its nationals, including members of the Baha'i Faith, Iran's largest religious minority;

Whereas the Congress has deplored the Government of Iran's religious persecution of the Baha'i community in such resolutions and in numerous other appeals, and has condemned Iran's execution of more than 200 Baha'is and the imprisonment of thousands of others solely on account of their religious beliefs;

Whereas the Government of Iran continues to deny individual Baha'is access to higher education and government employment and denies recognition and religious rights to the Baha'i community, according to the policy set forth in a confidential Iranian Government document which was revealed by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in 1993;

Whereas all Baha'i community properties in Iran have been confiscated by the government and Iranian Baha'is are not permitted to elect their leaders, organize as a community, operate religious schools or conduct other religious community activities guaranteed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights; and

Whereas on February 22, 1993, the United Nations Commission on Human Rights published a formerly confidential Iranian Government document that constitutes a blueprint for the destruction of the Baha'i community and reveals that these repressive actions are the result of a deliberate policy designed and approved by the highest officials of the Government of Iran: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress—

(1) continues to hold the Government of Iran responsible for upholding the rights of all its nationals, including members of the Baha'i community, in a manner consistent with Iran's obligations under the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international agreements guaranteeing the civil and political rights of its citizens;

(2) condemns the repressive anti-Baha'i policies and actions of the Government of Iran, including the denial of legal recognition to the Baha'i community and the basic rights to organize, elect it leaders, educate its youth, and conduct the normal activities of a law-abiding religious community;

(3) expresses concern that individual Baha'is continue to suffer from severely repressive and discriminatory government actions, solely on account of their religion;

(4) urges the Government of Iran to extend to the Baha'i community the rights guaranteed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the international covenants of human rights, including the freedom of thought, conscience, and religion, and equal protection of the law; and

(5) calls upon the President to continue—

(A) to assert the United States Government's concern regarding Iran's violations of the rights of its citizens, including members of the Baha'i community, along with expressions of its concern regarding the Iranian Government's support for international terrorism and its efforts to acquire weapons of mass destruction;

(B) to emphasize that the United States regards the human rights practices of the Government of Iran, particularly its treatment of the Baha'i community and other religious minorities, as a significant factor in the development of the United States Government's relations with the Government of Iran;

(C) to urge the Government of Iran to emancipate the Baha'i community by granting those rights guaranteed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the international covenants on human rights; and

(D) to encourage other governments to continue to appeal to the Government of Iran, and to cooperate with other governments and international organizations, including the United Nations and its agencies, in efforts to protect the religious rights of the Baha'is and other minorities through joint appeals to the Government of Iran and through other appropriate actions.

• Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, today I am submitting a concurrent resolution condemning the persecution of the Baha'i community that has been carried out systematically by the Government of Iran over the past two decades. I am joined in this effort by Senator DODD, Senator LIEBERMAN, Senator MCCAIN, and 23 other cosponsors.

Six times in the past, Congress has passed similar legislation, most recently in 1994. While Iran's repression of Baha'is appears less bloody today than during the 1980's, that persecution nevertheless continues. None of us has forgotten the confidential documents from 1991, drafted and signed by Iran's highest government and clerical authorities, which revealed a deliberate policy to destroy the Baha'is.

We believe it is important that Congress again raise its voice in protest of the Iranian Government's persecution of Baha'is. While American Baha'is reside in every State and are deeply concerned about the fate of more than 300,000 Baha'is in Iran, our legislation is not motivated by constituent pressure. Rather, it rests on broader principles. Ours is a Nation founded in an unwavering belief in the importance of religious freedom, and all Americans—whatever their religious convictions may be—believe strongly that no government should condemn and persecute a people because of their faith.

Yet, this is what the Government of Iran has done to the Baha'is for many years. Iran's constitution does not recognize Baha'is as a religious group but as unprotected infidels whose civil rights can be ignored at will. The Baha'i cannot legally marry or divorce in Iran, nor can they travel freely outside Iran. They cannot inherit property. They are not free to assemble and cannot elect community leaders or maintain their community institutions.

Since 1979, 201 Baha'is have been killed and 15 others have disappeared and are presumed dead. Arbitrary arrests of Baha'is continue. From January 1990 to June 1993, 43 Baha'is were arrested and detained for varying periods of time, and as of January this year 5 Baha'is were being held in prison because of their religious beliefs.

Baha'i cemeteries, holy places, historical sites, administrative centers, and other assets, most of which were seized in 1979, remain confiscated or have been destroyed. Baha'i property rights generally are disregarded, and many homes and businesses have been arbitrarily confiscated. More than 10,000 Baha'is were dismissed from positions in government and education in the early 1980's because of their religious beliefs, and many remain unemployed without benefits or pensions. Baha'i youth are systematically barred from institutions of higher learning.

Perhaps we cannot, from the United States Congress, end the terrible oppression of the Baha'is in Iran. But by submitting this concurrent resolution, we can send a clear message to all who will listen: We have not forgotten.•

• Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, on a number of occasions over the past several years, many of my colleagues and I have condemned the Government of Iran for its repressive policies and actions toward its Baha'i community. Today, I join with Senator KASSEBAUM, Senator DODD, Senator MCCAIN, and others in submitting another concurrent resolution calling on Iran to change its repressive anti-Baha'i policies and to protect the rights of all its people including minorities such as the Baha'is.

Since the Senate passed its first concurrent resolution on the Iranian Baha'is in 1982, we have seen some improvement in the situation. Persecution of individual Baha'is seems to be less severe than in past years. Expressions of international outrage and the application of diplomatic pressure have had some effect, even on the isolated and close-minded regime in Iran.

But the progress we have seen is not enough. It is not enough to say that the government is not persecuting these people as much as they used to. It is not enough to say that only a few Baha'is are being held in Iran's prisons because of their religious beliefs. It is not enough to say that the Government of Iran is willing, in the words of a 1991 policy document, to "permit them a modest livelihood." It is not enough that the Government of Iran is willing to allow Baha'is to "be enrolled in schools." It is not enough when all of these rights are dependent on citizens not identifying themselves as Baha'is.

The real thrust of Iranian policy is seen in the provisions of the 1991 policy document that say Baha'is "must be expelled from universities * * * once it becomes known that they are Baha'is" or that the Government will "deny them employment if they identify themselves as Baha'is." A policy which calls for a plan to "be devised to confront and destroy their cultural roots outside the country" and to "deny them any position of influence, such as in the educational sector, etc" is a policy of repression and denial of fundamental human rights. Such a policy violates the obligations of sovereign states to uphold the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international agreements guaranteeing the civil and political rights of citizens. Such a policy must change if Iran is ever to rejoin the community of nations.

Our action today in passing this resolution is consistent with the actions of the U.S. Government and responsible international bodies for many years. The Reagan and Bush administrations worked to gain international support for the Baha'i community. President Clinton has cited "the abusive treatment of the Baha'i in Iran" as a critical human rights concern and his administration has remained attentive to the fate of this community. The State Department has worked diligently to secure passage of U.N. resolutions condemning Iran for its persecution of the Baha'is and to raise the issue at all relevant international fora. The U.N. General Assembly has adopted numerous resolutions condemning Iran's human rights abuses with specific reference to the Baha'is. The German Bundestag and the European Parliament have also adopted resolutions condemning Iran's treatment of its Baha'i community.

And so we come before the Senate once again with a concurrent resolution which will keep this critical issue in the public eye and will maintain international pressure on Iran to change its ways. The American people understand very well that if the rights of all members of a society are not protected, then the rights of no one in the society are secure. We do not expect Iran to become a Jeffersonian democracy. But we and the entire world community have a right to expect and to demand that it not persecute any of its peoples solely for their religious preferences. How can a society consider itself to be just and based on the law of God when it persecutes in a broad and systematic fashion 300,000 of its citizens who constitute the largest religious minority in Iran? Iran must end its hypocrisy and extend to the Baha'i community the rights guaranteed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and international covenants on human rights.

I urge my colleagues to support this concurrent resolution and our continuing effort to bring about change in Iran.•

• Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, it is an honor once again to join my colleagues, Senators KASSEBAUM, DODD, and LIEBERMAN in submitting the seventh concurrent resolution since 1982 condemning the abuses endured by the Baha'i faithful in Iran. It is, however, an honor which I would prefer to be relieved of by an Iranian Government that respects the rights of religious minorities.

There has been some limited progress since 1982, but the situation for the Baha'is remains far from tolerable. Since 1979, 201 Baha'is have been killed and thousands have been jailed. Tens of thousands have been dismissed from jobs and denied the means to provide for themselves and their families. Baha'is, severely persecuted in life, are not even afforded peace in death. Fifteen thousand graves in the Baha'i cemetery in Tehran were recently desecrated as a result of an excavation to make way for a city cultural project.

The scope of this persecution would seem ample proof of systematic persecution. But if there were any doubt in the international community that the suffering of the Baha'is is a result of deliberate government policy, the United Nations dispelled it in 1993 by publishing a secret Iranian Government document. The secret code of oppression which came to light that year outlined Iran's design for the destruction of the Baha'i faith.

It ordered the expulsion of known Baha'is from universities. A common strategy of tyrannies—this process has succeeded in depriving higher education to an entire generation.

The document emphasizes that Baha'is should be punished for false allegations of "political espionage."

It calls for a multifaceted effort to stop the growth of the Baha'i religion.

And most frighteningly, it urges the destruction of the Baha'is "cultural roots outside their country."

The Baha'is suffer oppression not because they pose a threat to the power of the Iranian Government or the order of Iranian society, but because they refuse to recant their religious beliefs and accept the Islam of the mullahs.

There is perhaps no nation in the world with which we have as many differences as we do with Iran. Its quest for weapons of mass destruction and its support for international subversion pose direct threats to its neighbors, U.S. interests, and the interests of our allies.

If Iran is ever to enjoy normal relations with the free world, it must demonstrate a commitment to abide by the basic rules of relations among civilized nations. This must be made clear to Iran. But we must also communicate to the Government of Iran that Americans and, indeed, all the ever-expanding free world, consider religious tolerance to be a minimal requirement for entry into the community of nations. A Baha'i, no less than any other human being, is entitled to the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

For Baha'is, as for many people, happiness is pursued through religious devotion. If the theocracy that rules Iran cannot accept that enduring truth, it has no right to consider itself a worthy member of the civilized world.•

THE FARM BILL

• Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I would like to offer a few quick remarks regarding the Senate's recent passage of a comprehensive farm bill, especially how it relates to the Nation's dairy industry, from the dairy farmer, to the processor, to the consumer.

Mr. President, beginning in 1995, American fluid milk processors initiated what is essentially a self-funded program which aims to counteract a slow decline in the consumption levels of fluid milk. Strangely enough, fluid milk consumption in the United States has been declining over the past several years, due mainly to a misconception that milk is not good for you. The program's intent is simple: To change those misconceptions and thus increase the consumption of fluid milk. Thus far the program has been very successful.

This trial program exists under the authority of the Fluid Milk Processor Promotion Act of 1990, which is set to expire at the end of 1996. Later this month, processors will vote on whether to continue the program, which they are expected to do, but they will need the underlying authority to do so. Fortunately, Senator LUGAR's amendment included just such authority by removing the sunset date in the original legislation. I commend Senator LUGAR for his inclusion of the extended authority for the program.

Mr. President, promotion is the one area where milk processors and dairy farmers are working closely together and are in full agreement as to its benefits. This program, along with promotion efforts funded by dairy farmers, works to increase milk sales and help the entire dairy industry.•

THE RISING TIDE MUST LIFT MORE BOATS

• Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, yesterday our distinguished colleague Senator KENNEDY delivered to the Center for National Policy an important address challenging us to confront a number of issues critical to our economy and our society. I commend the address, "The Rising Tide Must Lift More Boats," to the attention of Senators and the public, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

ADDRESS OF SENATOR EDWARD M. KENNEDY, FEBRUARY 8, 1996

I'm grateful to your president, Mo Steinbruner, for that generous introduction, and I also want to acknowledge your Chairman, my former outstanding colleague in Congress, Mike Barnes. I'm honored to address the Center for National Policy. The Center has made impressive and innovative contributions to the national debate. It truly is a national policy center. I hope to speak with you today in that spirit—about the future of the American economy, the clear and present threat to the American standard of life, and a strategy for a prosperity that lifts not only the numbers and statistics, but the wages and hopes of hardworking people.

By most indicators, the economy is doing very well. The stock market is hitting record highs. Inflation has been low and consistently so. Unemployment is down. And after years of slow growth, productivity is finally on the rise.

But those appearances are deceiving. The prosperity is less than it seems—because it is uneven, uncertain, and inequitable. All is not well in the American economic house, because all is not well in the homes of too many American workers and their families.

Americans are working more and earning less. Their standard of living is stagnant or sinking. They have been forced deeper into debt and they have less to spend. They worry—about losing their jobs, losing their health insurance, affording their children's education, caring for their parents in old age, and somehow still saving for some semblance of security in their own retirement.

President Kennedy said that a rising tide lifts all boats. And for the golden decades after World War II, that was true. But today's rising tide is lifting only some of the boats—primarily the yachts.

The vast majority of economic gains are being channeled to the wealthy few, while the working men and women who are the strength and soul of this country and its economy are being shortchanged.

From World War II until 1973, national economic growth benefited the vast majority of Americans. We were all growing together; but now we are growing apart—and the result is a tip-of-the-iceberg economy. Since 1973, the lower 60 percent of American wage earners—three fifths of our entire workforce—have actually lost ground. Real family income has fallen for 60 percent of all Americans, even as the income of the wealthiest 5 percent increased by nearly a third, and income for the top 1 percent almost doubled. As we approach the 21st century, we confront an economically unjustified, socially dangerous, historically unprecedented, and morally unacceptable income gap between the wealthy and the rest of our people.

Twenty years ago, the typical CEO of a large corporation earned 40 times the salary of the average worker. Today that CEO earns 190 times more. Can this be called fair? Can this be the basis of a good or even a stable society?

Productivity gains used to guarantee wage gains. But not anymore. In 1994 and 1995, productivity rose by 3 percent. Yet wages fell by more than 2 percent—the biggest drop in eight years. So the average worker did more, and yet the income gap grew worse.

Flat or falling wages are compounded by the ever present specter of layoffs. Once, corporations reduced their workforces only when they were in trouble. But now profitable companies are laying off good workers, at a time of increasing sales, in an endless quest for ever fatter profits and ever higher stock prices.

The recent merger between Chase Manhattan Bank and Chemical Bank earned rave reviews on Wall Street—but brought anguish and loss to so many homes. Stock prices soared, but 12,000 jobs will be lost. Can this be called fair? Can this be the basis of a good or even a stable society?

And as economic insecurity multiplies, other values suffer. Community and family feel the pressure. Parents work longer hours or take second jobs, and every extra hour on the job is taking from their children—time not spent at Little League, or PTA, or simply reading a bedtime story.

Every loss of health insurance; every cut in support for child care, schools, colleges, and job training makes it harder for families to earn a better future. There are those, even in my own party, who see a separation between economics and values—a theoretical opposition which they use and misuse as an excuse for evading fundamental economic questions. But we cannot solve great social problems by instructing people to be good while their financial situation is going from bad to worse. The V Chip makes sense, but it is no substitute for college loans. It will not buy clothing or food. It will not give working families a sense of hope. We have no chance of restoring values if we don't improve the lives of working Americans. When the economy is wrong, nothing else is right.

A storm is coming, and the effects are already being felt by most families. Only the short-sighted, who look only to the next quarterly report, can be content to live with the clouds that now also shadow corporate horizons. Soon the winds will be blowing through the boardrooms too. America's workers are also America's consumers. We can only lay off so many workers, cut wages and benefits by so much, and tear down government support programs for so long, before we downsize the consumer sector as well. In a winner-take-all economy, eventually there will be fewer buyers, and fewer winners, and ultimately even many corporate losers.

The Republican program, from the Contract with America, to the flat tax, exploits the income gap—but does nothing real to solve it. The silence on this fundamental issue from the Republican Presidential candidates on the campaign trail is deafening.

By bashing Medicare, slashing education, and trashing the environment, Republican budget plans only widen the disparity. In fact, half of all spending cuts in the Republican budget that President Clinton vetoed came from programs benefiting the bottom 20 percent of families; less than a tenth of the cuts come from the top 20 percent.

Two-thirds of the tax breaks in the Republican plan would flow to the top 20 percent—and the bottom 20 percent would actually face a tax increase. The middle 60 percent would suffer a net loss too, once the spending cuts are factored in.

It makes no sense for Republicans to preach hope, growth, and opportunity—while touting policies that bring growth only to the richest, deny hope to the poorest, and restrict opportunity for the vast majority.

We need to set a different course. Early in this century, as Henry Ford pioneered one of America's great new companies, he raised the wages of his workers to twice the average in other industries. It made little apparent sense in terms of short-term profits. But he knew that in the long run, he would sell more Model T's if his own workers could afford to buy them. In the truest sense, he created his own consumers.

There are still some Henry Fords left, like Aaron Feuerstein, the Massachusetts mill owner, who decided to keep paying his employees instead of laying them off while he was rebuilding a factory that burned down last December.

The issue is not rich against poor, management against labor, or individuals against government. Sadly, the Party of Lincoln is now dividing America against itself. We cannot permanently sustain a prosperity that permits us to be divided between the wealthy few and the worried many.

We are committed to a free economy. But in times of testing in the past, we have had to act together as a nation to maintain the economy's freedom. A century ago, when economic power was concentrating in monopolies, we enacted the antitrust laws. In the midst of the Great Depression, we created a New Deal of employment programs and a social safety net.

Our day is different and our answers must be matched to it. But one basic principle remains the same: Government does have a role to play as the agent of our common concerns, and the expression of our shared values. The era of big government may be over, but a return to the era of no government is no answer.

President Clinton has spoken eloquently about this issue. So has Secretary of Labor Robert Reich, and so has the Center for National Policy. This is a defining moment for our nation—and a defining test for our party. We say we are the party of the people. Then how can we say little, and offer even less, while the very people who are the very reason for our being watch their livelihoods and lives become diminished?

Other great tests of conscience and purpose, like civil rights and the Vietnam War, may have been more visible and more immediate. The income gap has been opening slowly, over a period of years. Perhaps it could have been diagnosed earlier and treated sooner. Instead, it has festered quietly, and caused a long, slow-motion depression of wages and job security.

If we do not respond to this Quiet Depression, if we do not stand up now for the people we are supposed to represent, then as Democrats we will not deserve our name, our history, or their continuing confidence. It is our urgent task to fight for an economy where working families and the middle class can begin anew to make gains.

So today, I am proposing a strategy to end the income gap—to put the American dream back in the dreams of all Americans. Each part of society has its role to play—the business sector, the individual, and government. The strategy I advocate combines incentives for good corporate citizenship—improved protections for workers' rights—increased investment in education, training, technology and research—and greater wage and benefit security for all workers.

I realize that any strategy that requires legislative action has little chance in the present Congress. But the temporary ascendancy of reaction is no reason to be silent about what's right for America. Let us fight out the 1996 election on the fundamental issue of the income gap. And when President Clinton is re-elected, and Democrats retake Congress, let it be our pledge and our priority to right this lopsided economy.

Nothing less will do. The economic insecurity of millions of American families breeds distrust among our citizens and disrespect for our government. It tears us apart as a nation, and erodes law and order. It undermines family and community life—and threatens the character of America as a society of opportunity and justice for all.

First, as a basic precondition of all else, we must assure reliable, substantial and sustainable economic growth. Growth alone does not guarantee better incomes; but without it, we have no chance of closing the income gap. We cannot solve the problem of stagnant wages by redistributing rewards within a stagnant economy. Inflation has been lower for longer than at any time in decades; the Federal Reserve Board must become more aggressive in permitting and encouraging economic growth.

The Federal Reserve's charter requires it to pay attention to two goals—reducing unemployment and fighting inflation. Both goals are critical, but the Board too often seems to attend to only one of them. We need greater growth. We cannot right the nation's economic imbalance, or reverse the income gap facing working families, if 2.5% is the fastest which the Federal Reserve will let the economy grow.

America is historically a growth nation—and any policy that long defies that history will put this society at risk. We are stable, free people in part because we are also a people of plenty.

Second, we should create a two tier corporate tax rate that rewards those corporations which create higher quality and better paying jobs here at home. Let's accept the profit motive, and make it work for our workers as well as our corporations. I am not proposing tax penalties for bad corporate conduct, but tax incentives for good corporate citizenship.

We reward other countries with tariff benefits if they qualify as "Most Favored Nations." Now we should establish a category of "Most Favored Companies" and reward them if they share profits with workers, maintain or add good jobs, and treat their employees well.

Businesses will qualify for Most Favored Company status on the basis of their quantifiable track record over a rolling four-year period in creating jobs—avoiding layoffs designed simply to maximize profits—paying adequate wages—sharing gains—training and upgrading skills—and providing decent health care and retirements benefits.

Most Favored Companies will be taxed at a reduced rate—for example, 30% rather than 34%—or a 10% reduction for companies taxed at lower rates. To take advantage of the reduced rate, the company would agree to allocate half of the tax benefit to its workers.

Third, we should supplement the two tier corporate tax with other incentives to close the income gap.

We should provide comparable incentives to encourage fair treatment of employees in the non-profit sector, and in start-up firms and other enterprises that pay no tax or little tax.

We should adopt a tax incentive to encourage employers and workers to place retirement savings in pension funds, IRAs, and 401(k) plans that invest in Most Favored Companies.

We should reduce the capital gains tax on new equity investments in Most Favored Companies.

We should give preference to Most Favored Companies in awarding government contracts and grants.

We should provide tax credits to businesses that convert full or part-time workers without benefits to employees with adequate benefits. We should encourage companies that award dividends to their stockholders to contribute a similar benefit to their employees. Shareholders in companies that do so should have their dividends taxed at a reduced rate.

We can pay for all these changes by eliminating costly tax loopholes that encourage layoffs, discourage job creation, and reward companies for moving American jobs overseas. Over the next seven years, corporate welfare, tax loopholes and tax preferences will cost the federal government over four trillion dollars. In 2002, these tax entitlements will represent a larger share of the federal budget than Social Security, Medicare, or Medicaid.

The loopholes are gaping. In 1991, 73% of foreign-based corporations doing business in the United States paid no federal income taxes—I repeat, not a single dollar. And more than 60% of U.S.-based companies paid no U.S. income taxes.

We should eliminate the transfer-pricing loophole, under which multinational companies avoid U.S. taxes by shifting income through rigged transactions to overseas subsidiaries.

We should eliminate the runaway plant loophole, which lets foreign subsidiaries of American companies defer taxes on income earned abroad. These companies never pay taxes on their profits if they reinvest them overseas. The painful, preposterous result is that our tax laws generate new jobs and investments in foreign countries rather than here at home in America.

We should close down the foreign sales corporation loophole, a paper shell that lets companies shield thirty percent of their income from U.S. taxes.

We should eliminate the title passage loophole, which encourages U.S. companies to move profitable transactions onto the high seas to avoid U.S. taxes. In fact, this loophole was closed in both the House and the Senate versions of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, only to have it reappear behind closed doors in the final bill.

We can and must close the Benedict Arnold loophole, which allows billionaires to renounce their citizenship and move to a foreign tax haven in order to avoid taxes on the wealth they have accumulated in America. In 1995, the Senate voted overwhelmingly to end this disgrace. Yet the Republican budget quietly restores it.

Fourth, we should act to put new trust in antitrust, by amending the laws to restrain mergers and acquisitions in cases where combinations and spinoffs will cause layoffs so large that they are contrary to the public interest. Our goal is not to penalize the efficiency and productivity needed to compete in the new international economy. But the antitrust laws now bar monopolies harmful to communities, to geographical regions and markets, and to consumers. The same prohibition should apply to mergers that can affect communities, regions, and workers even more adversely than any monopoly ever would.

We should eliminate tax deductions for expenses for mergers and acquisitions that result in substantial layoffs, and strengthen existing provisions in current law that limit the deductibility of interest on massive debt utilized in these acquisitions. We should re-examine accounting rules that invite the corporate restructurings that encourage massive layoffs, downsizing, and reduced wages.

The fifth step in this new economy strategy is to expand opportunities for workers who want union representation. Today, employers who interfere with free choice and intimidate union advocates get away with only a slap on the wrist for their lawless conduct. Penalties for such violations should be strengthened. And the federal government should deny contracts and business to companies that repeatedly, flagrantly, or willfully violate their employees' rights and dignity.

We should also re-tool labor law itself to fit the growing number of temporary workers who move from one employer to another on short-term assignment, as we did in the construction industry. It is almost impossible under current rules for them to be represented by unions in negotiating for better wages, benefits, and working conditions. Federal law here has to be changed. A flexible workforce must not mean an exploited workforce.

Sixth, government at every level—federal, state, and local—must invest in education and training. In an increasingly global economy, uneducated workers in America will find their wages increasingly pressured downward by unskilled and underpaid workers overseas.

We need to work with states and local school districts to demand and to help all schools meet high standards of achievement and to expand early childhood education. We need to change the way we train teachers and offer them the recognition and support they deserve on the basis of their performance. As President Clinton has pledged, we should install computer technology in every school by the year 2000, in cooperation with businesses across the nation. We cannot prepare children for the 21st century in 1950's classrooms.

The doors to college must be re-opened to more Americans. Tuition costs should be deductible, and every qualified high school graduate should be guaranteed economic access to higher education.

We must provide training for real jobs to high school students not going on to college. We must provide retraining for workers who lose or change their jobs. We must reward companies that invest in upgrading the skills of their workforce.

Seventh, since small business is the real job creator in the new economy, it must be encouraged to do what it does best—create new products, enter new markets, increase productivity, and thereby put more people to work.

We must reduce the red tap associated with government assistance and regulation. Small businesses employ 50% of our workers, yet bear more than 60% of the regulatory burden. The average annual cost of regulation, paperwork, and tax compliance for small business far surpasses what large companies have to spend as a percentage of revenues. A recent Small Business Administration study found that 19 cents of every revenue dollar in small companies of less than 50 employees was spent on regulation. Genuine regulatory reform can ease these burdens. It could have been enacted by Congress long ago, if so many on the other side were not so intent on misusing regulatory reform as an excuse and a cover to protect polluters, undermine the environment, and jeopardize health and safety in the workplace.

Eighth, we should make research a priority—in terms of both direct federal funds and new incentives for business. Despite its far smaller economy, Japan will spend more dollars on non-defense R&D than we do next year. Yet, the Republican budget plan would cut R&D spending by 30% by the year 2002. Nothing could be more short-sighted than this policy of financing an unneeded tax cut by retreating from the scientific frontiers of future prosperity. Both the laser and the transistor resulted from government financed R&D. Computers, integrated circuits, medical breakthroughs like MRIs, and even the revolution of the Internet were federal R&D initiatives.

Ninth, we should do more to defend American workers against low-wage labor and sweatshop practices from overseas. It is not protectionist to refuse to compete on the basis of who can exploit their workers the most. We should declare a pause before entering into new free trade agreements, so our economy and our companies can adjust to NAFTA and GATT. And we should condition any and all new trade benefits on compliance by other countries with international labor standards. We favor free trade. But it must not mean that more and more of our workers have to work more and more of their days for free to match sweatshops overseas.

We should strengthen our immigration laws to prevent the importation of foreign wages and working conditions. We should make it illegal for employers to lay off Americans and then fill their jobs by bringing in workers from overseas. Any U.S. employer who wishes to hire from abroad—even for temporary jobs—should have to recruit U.S. workers first. And we should end the unskilled immigration that competes with young Americans just entering the job market.

Tenth, Congress should take long overdue direct action to improve incomes and benefits.

We can and must raise the minimum wage. The present level of four dollars and twenty-five cents an hour is a national scandal—not even enough to lift a family out of poverty. We should start now by raising the minimum wage to $5.15 an hour, and restore as much as possible of the purchasing power it has disgracefully lost in recent years. No American who works for a living should have to live in poverty.

We can and must strengthen the Earned Income Tax Credit, not reduce it. President Reagan called it the "best anti-poverty, the best pro-family, the best job creation measure to come out of Congress." Ronald Reagan was right, and the Republican Congress should heed his words.

Health care, too, can and must be a priority again. I for one will not permit health care to become the forgotten issue. It is all too present for Americans who have to pay the bills and face the fears every day. My abiding goal is still health security for every citizen. The reform I have introduced with Senator Kassebaum is a significant step with broad bi-partisan support. It could be enacted quickly—if we can overcome the obstruction of a handful of Republican Senators doing the bidding of insurance industry profiteers. Our reform is simply justice: workers who change their job or lose their job should not lose their health insurance too.

Finally, we must secure the safety and sanctity of pensions. They must never become a corporate slush fund or a piggy bank for risky investments. Here again, the Republicans, instead of building more protections, seek to undermine those that already exist. The Republican Congress proposes to let unscrupulous corporations raid workers' pension funds, and they even make the preposterous claim that they're closing a tax loophole. This is odd, coming from those who previously never seem to have met a tax loophole they didn't like. In fact, it will cost the government nothing to protect pension funds against corporate raiders and unscrupulous investment managers.

We should create new incentives to extend pension coverage to all workers, not just the 48% who are currently covered, by establishing a new class of multi-employer, portable pension accounts.

We can also put workers' pension funds to work to close the income gap. We should maintain and strengthen the incentives which the Republicans seek to eliminate that can direct the $4.5 trillion currently in pension funds to investments that will mean more and better jobs here in America. The AFL–CIO Investment Trust is now committing half a billion dollars a year to housing and economic development projects. Their rate of return is highly competitive, and there are similar examples across the country. The issue here is as plain as the investment opportunity. The pension funds of American workers should be financing economic growth at home, not the export of American jobs overseas.

Of course, no economic program, no matter how far-reaching, can resolve all the hurts or fulfill all the hopes of a nation. But all to often we forget the link between values and economics. We lament the loss of traditional "family values," yet we forget that the golden age we look back to was also a time when family incomes were steadily rising. We berate Hollywood for glorifying sex and violence, yet we worship the profit motives that generate the very films we condemn. We hear voices calling for the end of affirmative action, or worrying that our society has become too diverse to survive, but we ignore at our peril the fact that those voices are driven by fear of economic loss. We worry about the loss of patriotism, yet our tax policies encourage corporate decisions that are plainly anti-American.

If we really believe in family values, then let's do a better job of valuing families. Let's change policies that threaten their jobs, their health care, and their pensions. Let's help people educate their children and care for their parents. If we really want to put the "United" back in the United States, then let's do all we can to expand the pie and provide economic opportunity for all, instead of letting the nation fragment into two separate and unequal factions of haves and have-nots.

We will only make things worse by pursuing nostrums and illusions—whether they take the form of social reaction, or the new deception of the flat tax. The flat tax is a cynical response to the income gap—offering but perhaps not even delivering a small tax cut as the only raise most workers will get—while surely providing a shameful windfall for those who already have the most. The Forbes flat tax gives new meaning to Franklin Roosevelt's indictment of the Republicans as the party of the privileged. The only family value the Forbes flat tax would enhance is the net worth of the Forbes 400.

We are coming to the close of what has been called the "American Century." It has been an extraordinary era in which we have conquered imperialism, fascism, and communism abroad. We have wrestled with racism, sexism, poverty, depression, crime and other enemies within. We have struggled, often imperfectly, yet with great success, to build a fairer and freer society. And we have wisely used some of our resources to help other nations achieve and protect their own democratic ideals. The danger is that the achievements and the vision that made this possible are fading too quickly into the forgetfulness of history, and that we are becoming a nation fragmented between rich and poor, its values diminishing as its standard of living is devalued.

We can and must end the income gap in America. It will require a new Progressive Era which will come, just as the first one did, just after the forces of reaction think they have achieved their dominance. We can and must restore true progress in America. That is our duty as progressives. That is the defining mission of the Democratic Party. And in my view, that is the only way we can win—and the only way we will deserve to win—in 1996.●

CONGRATULATING THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RETIRED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES ON THE OCCASION OF ITS 75TH ANNIVERSARY

● Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate the National Association of Retired Federal Employees on its 75 years of service to our public servants and our communities.

NARFE has protected the rights and retirement benefits of Federal employees and their widows now for three quarters of a century. In that cause they have grown from 14 members to an organization of half a million members with 53 State federations and more than 1,740 active local chapters in the United States, Puerto Rico, Panama, the Philippines, and Guam.

In my own State of Michigan, the city of Dearborn is home to area chapter 1515, with 975 members of NARFE. These fine people contribute to the community, not only by fulfilling their official duties, but through their many acts of good citizenship, charity, and public-spirited voluntaism.

In recognition of the National Association of Retired Federal Employees' service to its members, to the public at large, and to the many communities in which its members live and participate in public life, I would invite my colleagues to join me in recognizing February 19, 1996, NARFE's 75th anniversary, as National Association of Retired Federal Employees Day.●

THE 50TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY OF JOE AND EILEEN COATAR

● Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. Mr. President, I rise today to honor Joseph and Eileen Coatar, two long-time constituents of mine, who celebrated the truly momentous event on February 2, 1996—their golden wedding anniversary. Their 50 years of marriage, a demonstration of their strong commitment to each other and their seven children, can serve as an example to us all.

Joe Coatar and Eileen Prendergast grew up in warm, close-knit families, who lived in adjoining parishes on the South Side of Chicago. They began dating in high school: Eileen attended Mercy High School, while Joe went to Tilden Technical High School, where he is a member of the alumni hall of fame. His athletic prowess earned him all-city honors for football in 1937. He then attended Notre Dame on football and baseball scholarships, well before the Bo Jackson era. Eileen was his No. 1 fan. Joe left school in 1940 to play left field for the Chicago White Sox. He was then called to serve our country in the U.S. Army from 1943 to 1945, then returned to Chicago to marry Eileen, the girl next door, on February 2, 1946, in St. Martin's Church in Chicago. They have seven loving children: Mary Jane, Bernadette, Joan, Joseph, Eileen, Dennis, and Genevieve. They also have 15 treasured grandchildren.

Joe served his city as a Chicago police officer immediately after his military service. He then did management consulting work for a number of firms, and finished his career with a 12-year stint at Blue Cross/Blue Shield. He was also civic-minded, somehow finding time to serve two terms as Park Forest South Village trustee, one term as a Monee Township trustee, and 20 years as a Democratic precinct committeeman for Will County.

In 1972, after raising seven children, Eileen continued her motherly role working with students at Marian Catholic High School in Chicago Heights. She continues to work there, at the age of 78, and will soon be inducted into their alumni hall of fame in recognition of her long-time dedication to Marian's students. She served as president of the Mothers' Club twice, and volunteered in the library, before becoming a well-loved member of the cafeteria staff almost 25 years ago.

Joe and Eileen renewed their vows at their parish church in Flossmoor, Infant Jesus of Prague, this Saturday, surrounded by friends and family. We talk a lot about family values here in Washington. Joe and Eileen don't just talk the talk, they walk the walk. Their lives epitomize the values that make this country such a special place. I congratulate the Coatars on their 50th anniversary, and I wish them many more years of happiness together.●

TRIBUTE TO PETER WOJCIECHOWSKI

● Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to recognize Peter Wojciechowski, from Anoka, MN for his dedication and service as president of the Minnesota Rural Electric Association over the past 10 years.

Peter has been a pillar of the community. As the long-time owner of Thurston's Furniture in Anoka, to his service on a variety of civic boards, including the Anoka County library board and the Ham Lake Planning Commission, Peter has been a model Minnesota citizen. However, it is his work on behalf of Minnesota's electric cooperatives which I would like to recognize today.

This month, Peter completes his term as president of the Minnesota Rural Electric Association, which represents 54 member-owned electric cooperatives in Minnesota. During his tenure, Minnesota's electric cooperatives led the Nation in creating jobs in rural areas. Under Peter's stewardship, electric co-ops have met the unserved needs of its rural members in telecommunications, water and waste water infrastructure and other services not readily available in the far reaches of greater Minnesota.

Peter also represents Minnesota as a national director on the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association and serves on the International Foundation Board which assists developing countries in establishing electric cooperatives.

I want to commend Peter for his efforts and for the leadership he provided over the past 10 years on behalf of Minnesota's electric cooperatives. His contributions toward ensuring that the lights of rural Minnesota, rural America, and rural areas throughout the world burn bright are truly commendable and worthy of recognition.

Mr. President, it is a privilege for me to insert Peter's accomplishments here on the floor of the U.S. Senate.●

UPPER GREAT PLAINS TRANSPORTATION INSTITUTE AT NDSU

● Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, today I rise to commend the work of North Dakota State University's Upper Great Plains Transportation Institute. The institute is a great asset to North Dakota and other States in the surrounding region and an invaluable resource and leader in transportation research.

In early January the Transportation Research Board of the National Research Council held its 75th annual meeting in Washington. This meeting brought together more than 3,000 participants from Federal and State Governments, universities, and the private sector. The participants discussed scientific, engineering, and technological questions related to highways and bridges. The 5-day conference was a success, in part because of a telecommunications system operated by North Dakota State University.

Eleven conference sessions with almost 150 panelists were delivered by videoconference to the State departments of transportation in 6 States: Colorado, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Utah, and Wyoming. The teleconference was accomplished through the use of the TEL8 Center at North Dakota State University, in cooperation with the West Virginia Teleconferencing Network.

TEL8 is a digital, 2-way, interactive, satellite-based telecommunications system. It links 10 sites in 6 States, and is dedicated to meeting transportation needs in the region. The system is operated by the Upper Great Plains Transportation Institute at North Dakota State University. The system was made possible as a result of the University Transportation Centers Program sponsored by the U.S. Department of Transportation.

More than 300 people located more than 1,000 miles from Washington were able to participate in the conference through the telecommunications system. Not only were they able to hear the presentations, but they had the opportunity to make comments and engage in question-and-answer periods.

Robert E. Skinner, Executive Director of the Transportation Research Board, said recently:

> Because of busy schedules and limited travel funds, many transportation professionals are unable to participate at TRB's annual meeting. TEL8 showed that technology can help overcome these barriers and provide a means for real-time participation at remote locations.

We hear much these days about the promise of telecommunications and how technology is changing our lives. We hear discussions about the speed of transmissions, interactions, savings of time and travel costs, and convenience. North Dakota State University is doing more than talking about the promise of telecommunications, Mr. President. Through the TEL8 system, NDSU is making the promise of telecommunications a reality today.

Telecommunications activities are increasingly important throughout our Nation, particularly in rural States such as mine. The TEL8 system is also used for professional training and support and for the delivery of courses relevant to transportation. NDSU is exploring additional ways to use the system for distance learning and service-related activities.

I am proud of North Dakota State University's involvement and foresight in this important field. I appreciate this opportunity to bring it to the attention of my colleagues.●

(4) ANNUAL PAYMENT AMOUNT.—The amount to be paid under a contract in effect for each fiscal year with respect to a contract commodity shall be equal to the product of—

(A) the payment quantity determined under paragraph (1) with respect to the contract; and

(B) the payment rate in effect under paragraph (3).

(5) ASSIGNMENT OF CONTRACT PAYMENTS.—The provisions of section 8(g) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act (16 U.S.C. 590h(g)) (relating to assignment of payments) shall apply to contract payments under this subsection. (h) EFFECT OF VIOLATION.—

(1) TERMINATION OF CONTRACT.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), if an owner or operator subject to a contract violates the conservation plan for the farm containing eligible farmland under the contract, wetland protection requirements applicable to the farm, or the planting flexibility requirements of subsection (j), the Secretary shall terminate the contract with respect to the owner or operator on each farm in which the owner or operator has an interest. On the termination, the owner or operator shall forfeit all rights to receive future contract payments on each farm in which the owner or operator has an interest and shall refund to the Secretary all contract payments received by the owner or operator during the period of the violation, together with interest on the contract payments as determined by the Secretary.

(2) REFUND OR ADJUSTMENT.—If the Secretary determines that a violation does not warrant termination of the contract under paragraph (1), the Secretary may require the owner or operator subject to the contract—

(A) to refund to the Secretary that part of the contract payments received by the owner or operator during the period of the violation, together with interest on the contract payments as determined by the Secretary; or

(B) to accept a reduction in the amount of future contract payments that is proportionate to the severity of the violation, as determined by the Secretary.

(3) FORECLOSURE.—An owner or operator subject to a contract may not be required to make repayments to the Secretary of amounts received under the contract if the contract acreage has been foreclosed on and the Secretary determines that forgiving the repayments is appropriate in order to provide fair and equitable treatment. This paragraph shall not void the responsibilities of such an owner or operator under the contract if the owner or operator continues or resumes operation, or control, of the contract acreage. On the resumption of operation or control over the contract acreage by the owner or operator, the provisions of the contract in effect on the date of the foreclosure shall apply.

(4) REVIEW.—A determination of the Secretary under this subsection shall be considered to be an adverse decision for purposes of the availability of administrative review of the determination.

(i) TRANSFER OF INTEREST IN LANDS SUBJECT TO CONTRACT.—

(1) EFFECT OF TRANSFER.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the transfer by an owner or operator subject to a contract of the right and interest of the owner or operator in the contract acreage shall result in the termination of the contract with respect to the acreage, effective on the date of the transfer, unless the transferee of the acreage agrees with the Secretary to assume all obligations of the contract. At the request of the transferee, the Secretary may modify the contract if the modifications are consistent with the objectives of this section as determined by the Secretary.

(2) EXCEPTION.—If an owner or operator who is entitled to a contract payment dies, becomes incompetent, or is otherwise unable to receive the contract payment, the Secretary shall make the payment, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

(j) PLANTING FLEXIBILITY.—

(1) PERMITTED CROPS.—Subject to paragraph (2), any commodity or crop may be planted on contract acreage on a farm.

(2) LIMITATIONS.—

(A) HAYING AND GRAZING.—

(i) TIME LIMITATIONS.—Haying and grazing on land exceeding 15 percent of the contract acreage on a farm as provided in clause (iii) shall be permitted, except during any consecutive 5-month period between April 1 and October 31 that is determined by the State committee established under section 8(b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act (16 U.S.C. 590h(b)) for a State. In the case of a natural disaster, the Secretary may permit unlimited haying and grazing on the contract acreage of a farm.

(ii) CONTRACT COMMODITIES.—Contract acreage planted to a contract commodity during the crop year may be hayed or grazed without limitation.

(iii) HAYING AND GRAZING LIMITATION ON PORTION OF CONTRACT ACREAGE.—Unlimited haying and grazing shall be permitted on not more than 15 percent of the contract acreage on a farm.

(C) FRUITS AND VEGETABLES.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—The planting for harvest of fruits and vegetables shall be prohibited on contract acreage, unless there is a history of double cropping of a contract commodity and fruits and vegetables.

(C) Association costs.—Loans made to the association under this paragraph shall include such costs as the area marketing association reasonably may incur in carrying out the responsibilities, operations, and activities of the association under this section and section 358e of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (7 U.S.C. 1359a).

(2) Pools for quota and additional peanuts.—

(A) In general.—The Secretary shall require that each area marketing association establish pools and maintain complete and accurate records by area and segregation for quota peanuts handled under loan and for additional peanuts placed under loan, except that separate pools shall be established for Valencia peanuts produced in New Mexico.

(B) Eligibility to participate.—

(i) In general.—Except as provided in clause (ii), in the case of the 1996 and subsequent crops, Valencia peanuts not physically produced in the State of New Mexico shall not be eligible to participate in the pools of the State.

(ii) Exception.—A resident of the State of New Mexico may enter Valencia peanuts that are produced outside of the State into the pools of the State in a quantity that is not greater than the 1995 crop of the resident that was produced outside the State.

(C) Types of peanuts.—Bright hull and dark hull Valencia peanuts shall be considered as separate types for the purpose of establishing the pools.

(D) Net gains.—Net gains on peanuts in each pool, unless otherwise approved by the Secretary, shall be distributed only to producers who placed peanuts in the pool and shall be distributed in proportion to the value of the peanuts placed in the pool by each producer. Net gains for peanuts in each pool shall consist of the following:

(i) Quota peanuts.—For quota peanuts, the net gains over and above the loan indebtedness and other costs or losses incurred on peanuts placed in the pool.

(ii) Additional peanuts.—For additional peanuts, the net gains over and above the loan indebtedness and other costs or losses incurred on peanuts placed in the pool for additional peanuts.

(d) Losses.—Losses in quota area pools shall be covered using the following sources in the following order of priority:

(1) Transfers from additional loan pools.—The proceeds due any producer from any pool shall be reduced by the amount of any loss that is incurred with respect to peanuts transferred from an additional loan pool to a quota loan pool by the producer under section 358–1(b)(8) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (7 U.S.C. 1358–1(b)(8)).

(2) Other producers in same pool.—Further losses in an area quota pool shall be offset by reducing the gain of any producer in the pool by the amount of pool gains attributed to the same producer from the sale of additional peanuts for domestic and export edible use.

(3) Offset within area.—Further losses in an area quota pool shall be offset by any gains or profits from additional peanuts (other than separate type pools established under subsection (c)(2)(A) for Valencia peanuts produced in New Mexico) owned or controlled by the Commodity Credit Corporation in that area and sold for domestic edible use, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary.

(4) Use of marketing assessments.—The Secretary shall use funds collected under subsection (g) (except funds attributable to handlers) to offset further losses in area quota pools. The Secretary shall transfer to the Treasury those funds collected under subsection (g) and available for use under this subsection that the Secretary determines are not required to cover losses in area quota pools.

(5) Cross compliance.—Further losses in area quota pools, other than losses incurred as a result of transfers from additional loan pools to quota loan pools under section 358–1(b)(8) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (7 U.S.C. 1358–1(b)(8)), shall be offset by any gains or profits from quota pools in other production areas (other than separate type pools established under subsection (c)(2)(A) for Valencia peanuts produced in New Mexico) in such manner as the Secretary shall by regulation prescribe.

(6) Offset generally.—If losses in an area quota pool have not been entirely offset under paragraph (3), further losses shall be offset by any gains or profits from additional peanuts (other than separate type pools established under subsection (c)(2)(A) for Valencia peanuts produced in New Mexico) owned or controlled by the Commodity Credit Corporation and sold for domestic edible use, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary.

(7) Increased assessments.—If use of the authorities provided in the preceding paragraphs is not sufficient to cover losses in an area quota pool, the Secretary shall increase the marketing assessment established under subsection (g) by such an amount as the Secretary considers necessary to cover the losses. The increased assessment shall apply only to quota peanuts in the production area covered by the pool. Amounts collected under subsection (g) as a result of the increased assessment shall be retained by the Secretary to cover losses in that pool.

(e) Disapproval of Quotas.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no loan for quota peanuts may be made available by the Secretary for any crop of peanuts with respect to which poundage quotas have been disapproved by producers, as provided for in section 358–1(d) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (7 U.S.C. 1358–1(d)).

(f) Quality Improvement.—

(1) In general.—With respect to peanuts under loan, the Secretary shall—

(A) promote the crushing of peanuts at a greater risk of deterioration before peanuts of a lesser risk of deterioration;

(B) ensure that all Commodity Credit Corporation inventories of peanuts sold for domestic edible use must be shown to have been officially inspected by licensed Department inspectors both as farmer stock and shelled or cleaned in-shell peanuts;

(C) continue to endeavor to operate the peanut program so as to improve the quality of domestic peanuts and ensure the coordination of activities under the Peanut Administrative Committee established under Marketing Agreement No. 146, regulating the quality of domestically produced peanuts (under the Agricultural Adjustment Act (7 U.S.C. 601 et seq.), reenacted with amendments by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937); and

(D) ensure that any changes made in the peanut program as a result of this subsection requiring additional production or handling at the farm level shall be reflected as an upward adjustment in the Department loan schedule.

(2) Exports and other peanuts.—The Secretary shall require that all peanuts in the domestic and export markets fully comply with all quality standards under Marketing Agreement No. 146.

(g) Marketing Assessment.—

(1) In general.—The Secretary shall provide for a nonrefundable marketing assessment. The assessment shall be made on a per pound basis in an amount equal to 1.1 percent for each of the 1994 and 1995 crops, 1.15 percent for the 1996 crop, and 1.2 percent for each of the 1997 through 2002 crops, of the national average quota or additional peanut loan rate for the applicable crop.

(2) First purchasers.—

(A) In general.—Except as provided under paragraphs (3) and (4), the first purchaser of peanuts shall—

(i) collect from the producer a marketing assessment equal to the quantity of peanuts acquired multiplied by—

(I) in the case of each of the 1994 and 1995 crops, .55 percent of the applicable national average loan rate;

(II) in the case of the 1996 crop, .6 percent of the applicable national average loan rate; and

(iii) remit the amounts required under clauses (i) and (ii) to the Commodity Credit Corporation in a manner specified by the Secretary.

(B) DEFINITION OF FIRST PURCHASER.—In this subsection, the term "first purchaser" means a person acquiring peanuts from a producer except that in the case of peanuts forfeited by a producer to the Commodity Credit Corporation, the term means the person acquiring the peanuts from the Commodity Credit Corporation.

(3) OTHER PRIVATE MARKETINGS.—In the case of a private marketing by a producer directly to a consumer through a retail or wholesale outlet or in the case of a marketing by the producer outside of the continental United States, the producer shall be responsible for the full amount of the assessment and shall remit the assessment by such time as is specified by the Secretary.

(4) LOAN PEANUTS.—In the case of peanuts that are pledged as collateral for a loan made under this section, ½ of the assessment shall be deducted from the proceeds of the loan. The remainder of the assessment shall be paid by the first purchaser of the peanuts. For purposes of computing net gains on peanuts under this section, the reduction in loan proceeds shall be treated as having been paid to the producer.

(5) PENALTIES.—If any person fails to collect or remit the reduction required by this subsection or fails to comply with the requirements for recordkeeping or otherwise as are required by the Secretary to carry out this subsection, the person shall be liable to the Secretary for a civil penalty up to an amount determined by multiplying—

(A) the quantity of peanuts involved in the violation; by

"SEC. 1123. TRADE NEGOTIATIONS POLICY.

"(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

"(1) on a level playing field, United States producers are the most competitive suppliers of agricultural products in the world;

"(2) exports of United States agricultural products will account for $53,000,000,000 in 1995, contributing a net $24,000,000,000 to the merchandise trade balance of the United States and supporting approximately 1,000,000 jobs;

"(3) increased agricultural exports are critical to the future of the farm, rural, and overall United States economy, but the opportunities for increased agricultural exports are limited by the unfair subsidies of the competitors of the United States, and a variety of tariff and nontariff barriers to highly competitive United States agricultural products;

"(4) international negotiations can play a key role in breaking down barriers to United States agricultural exports;

"(5) the Uruguay Round Agreement on Agriculture made significant progress in the attainment of increased market access opportunities for United States exports of agricultural products, for the first time—

"(A) restraining foreign trade-distorting domestic support and export subsidy programs; and

"(B) developing common rules for the application of sanitary and phytosanitary restrictions; that should result in increased exports of United States agricultural products, jobs, and income growth in the United States;

"(6) the Uruguay Round Agreement on Agriculture did not succeed in completely eliminating trade distorting domestic support and export subsidies by—

"(A) allowing the European Union to continue unreasonable levels of spending on export subsidies; and

"(B) failing to discipline monopolistic state trading entities, such as the Canadian Wheat Board, that use nontransparent and discriminatory pricing as a hidden de facto export subsidy;

"(7) during the period 1996 through 2002, there will be several opportunities for the United States to negotiate fairer trade in agricultural products, including further negotiations under the World Trade Organization, and steps toward possible free trade agreements of the Americas and Asian-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC); and

"(8) the United States should aggressively use these opportunities to achieve more open and fair opportunities for trade in agricultural products.

"(b) GOALS OF THE UNITED STATES IN AGRICULTURAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS.—The objectives of the United States with respect to future negotiations on agricultural trade include—

"(1) increasing opportunities for United States exports of agricultural products by eliminating or substantially reducing tariff and nontariff barriers to trade;

"(2) leveling the playing field for United States producers of agricultural products by limiting per unit domestic production supports to levels that are no greater than those available in the United States;

"(3) ending the practice of export dumping by eliminating all trade distorting export subsidies and disciplining state trading entities so that they do not (except in cases of bona fide food aid) sell in foreign markets at below domestic market prices nor their full costs of acquiring and delivering agricultural products to the foreign markets; and

"(4) encouraging government policies that avoid price-depressing surpluses.".

SEC. 314. ENVIRONMENTAL QUALITY INCENTIVES PROGRAM.

Subtitle D of title XII of the Food Security Act of 1985 (16 U.S.C. 3830 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''CHAPTER 4—ENVIRONMENTAL QUALITY INCENTIVES PROGRAM

''SEC. 1238. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

''(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

''(1) farmers and ranchers cumulatively manage more than ½ of the private lands in the continental United States;

''(2) because of the predominance of agriculture, the soil, water, and related natural resources of the United States cannot be protected without cooperative relationships between the Federal Government and farmers and ranchers;

''(3) farmers and ranchers have made tremendous progress in protecting the environment and the agricultural resource base of the United States over the past decade because of not only Federal Government programs but also their spirit of stewardship and the adoption of effective technologies;

''(4) it is in the interest of the entire United States that farmers and ranchers continue to strive to preserve soil resources and make more efforts to protect water quality and wildlife habitat, and address other broad environmental concerns;

''(5) environmental strategies that stress the prudent management of resources, as opposed to idling land, will permit the maximum economic opportunities for farmers and ranchers in the future;

''(6) unnecessary bureaucratic and paperwork barriers associated with existing agricultural conservation assistance programs decrease the potential effectiveness of the programs; and

''(7) the recent trend of Federal spending on agricultural conservation programs suggests that assistance to farmers and ranchers in future years will, absent changes in policy, dwindle to perilously low levels.

''(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of the environmental quality incentives program established by this chapter are to—

''(1) combine into a single program the functions of—

''(A) the agricultural conservation program authorized by sections 7 and 8 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act (16 U.S.C. 590g and 590h) (as in effect before the amendments made by section 355(a)(1) of the Agricultural Reform and Improvement Act of 1996);

''(B) the Great Plains conservation program established under section 16(b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act (16 U.S.C. 590p(b)) (as in effect before the amendment made by section 355(b)(1) of the Agricultural Reform and Improvement Act of 1996); and

''(C) the water quality incentives program established under chapter 2 (as in effect before the amendment made by section 355(k) of the Agricultural Reform and Improvement Act of 1996); and

''(C) the Colorado River Basin salinity control program established under section 202(c) of the Colorado River Basin Salinity Control Act (43 U.S.C. 1592(c)) (as in effect before the amendment made by section 355(c)(1) of the Agricultural Reform and Improvement Act of 1996); and

''(2) carry out the single program in a manner that maximizes environmental benefits per dollar expended, and that provides—

''(A) flexible technical and financial assistance to farmers and ranchers that face the most serious threats to soil, water, and related natural resources, including grazing lands, wetlands, and wildlife habitat;

''(B) assistance to farmers and ranchers in complying with this title and Federal and State environmental laws, and to encourage environmental enhancement;

''(C) assistance to farmers and ranchers in making beneficial, cost-effective changes to cropping systems, grazing management, manure, nutrient, pest, or irrigation management, land uses, or other measures needed to conserve and improve soil, water, and related natural resources; and

''(D) for the consolidation and simplification of the conservation planning process to reduce administrative burdens on the owners and operators of farms and ranches.

''SEC. 1238A. DEFINITIONS.

''In this chapter:

''(B) evaluation of the offer in light of the priorities established in section 1238C and the projected cost of the proposal, as determined by the Secretary.

''(2) CONCURRENCE OF OWNER.—If the operator making an offer to implement a structural practice is a tenant of the land involved in agricultural production, for the offer to be acceptable, the operator shall obtain the concurrence of the owner of the land with respect to the offer.

"(A) In general.—The Federal share of cost-sharing payments to an operator proposing to implement 1 or more structural practices shall not be more than 75 percent of the projected cost of the practice, as determined by the Secretary, taking into consideration any payment received by the operator from a State or local government.

"(B) Limitation.—An operator of a large confined livestock operation shall not be eligible for cost-sharing payments to construct an animal waste management facility.

The allocated amount may vary according to the type of expertise required, quantity of time involved, and other factors as determined appropriate by the Secretary. Funding shall not exceed the projected cost to the Secretary of the technical assistance provided in a fiscal year.

"(2) Other authorities.—The receipt of technical assistance under this chapter shall not affect the eligibility of the operator to receive technical assistance under other authorities of law available to the Secretary.

"(g) Modification or Termination of Contracts.—

"(1) Voluntary modification or termination.—The Secretary may modify or terminate a contract entered into with an operator under this chapter if—

"(A) the operator agrees to the modification or termination; and

"(B) the Secretary determines that the modification or termination is in the public interest.

"(2) Involuntary termination.—The Secretary may terminate a contract under this chapter if the Secretary determines that the operator violated the contract.

"(h) Non-Federal Assistance.—

"(1) In general.—The Secretary may request the services of a State water quality agency, State fish and wildlife agency, State forestry agency, or any other governmental or private resource considered appropriate to assist in providing the technical assistance necessary for the development and implementation of a structural practice or land management practice.

"(2) Limitation on liability.—No person shall be permitted to bring or pursue any claim or action against any official or entity based on or resulting from any technical assistance provided to an operator under this chapter to assist in complying with a Federal or State environmental law.

"SEC. 1238C. EVALUATION OF OFFERS AND PAYMENTS.

"(a) Regional Priorities.—The Secretary shall provide technical assistance, cost-sharing payments, and incentive payments to operators in a region, watershed, or conservation priority area under this chapter based on the significance of the soil, water, and related natural resource problems in the region, watershed, or area, and the structural practices or land management practices that best address the problems, as determined by the Secretary.

"(b) Maximization of Environmental Benefits.—

"SEC. 1238D. DUTIES OF OPERATORS.

"To receive technical assistance, cost-sharing payments, or incentives payments under this chapter, an operator shall agree—

"(1) to implement an environmental quality incentives program plan that describes conservation and environmental goals to be achieved through a structural practice or land management practice, or both, that is approved by the Secretary;

"(2) not to conduct any practices on the farm or ranch that would tend to defeat the purposes of this chapter;

"(3) on the violation of a term or condition of the contract at any time the operator has control of the land, to refund any cost-sharing or incentive payment received with interest, and forfeit any future payments under this chapter, as determined by the Secretary;

"(4) on the transfer of the right and interest of the operator in land subject to the contract, unless the transferee of the right and interest agrees with the Secretary to assume all obligations of the contract, to refund all cost-sharing payments and incentive payments received under this chapter, as determined by the Secretary;

"(2) an area that is considered to be critical agricultural land on which either crop or livestock production is carried out, as identified in a plan submitted by the State under section 319 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1329) as having priority problems that result from an agricultural nonpoint source of pollution;

"(3) an area recommended by a State lead agency for protection of soil, water, and related resources, as designated by a Governor of a State; and

(2) privately owned grazing land contains a complex set of interactions among soil, water, air, plants, and animals;

(3) grazing land constitutes the single largest watershed cover type in the United States and contributes significantly to the quality and quantity of water available for all of the many uses of the land;

(4) private grazing land constitutes the most extensive wildlife habitat in the United States;

(5) private grazing land can provide opportunities for improved nutrient management from land application of animal manures and other by-product nutrient resources;

(6) owners and managers of private grazing land need to continue to recognize conservation problems when the problems arise and receive sound technical assistance to improve or conserve grazing land resources to meet ecological and economic demands;

(7) new science and technology must continually be made available in a practical manner so owners and managers of private grazing land may make informed decisions concerning vital grazing land resources;

(8) agencies of the Department of Agriculture with private grazing land responsibilities are the agencies that have the expertise and experience to provide technical assistance, education, and research to owners and managers of private grazing land for the long-term productivity and ecological health of grazing land;

(9) although competing demands on private grazing land resources are greater than ever before, assistance to private owners and managers of private grazing land is currently limited and does not meet the demand and basic need for adequately sustaining or enhancing the private grazing lands resources; and

(10) privately owned grazing land can be enhanced to provide many benefits to all Americans through voluntary cooperation among owners and managers of the land, local conservation districts, and the agencies of the Department of Agriculture responsible for providing assistance to owners and managers of land and to conservation districts.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to provide a coordinated technical, educational, and related assistance program to conserve and enhance private grazing land resources and provide related benefits to all citizens of the United States by—

(1) establishing a coordinated and cooperative Federal, State, and local grazing conservation program for management of private grazing land;

(2) strengthening technical, educational, and related assistance programs that provide assistance to owners and managers of private grazing land;

(3) conserving and improving wildlife habitat on private grazing land;

(4) conserving and improving fish habitat and aquatic systems through grazing land conservation treatment;

(5) protecting and improving water quality;

(6) improving the dependability and consistency of water supplies;

(e) GRAZING TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE SELF-HELP.—

(1) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(A) there is a severe lack of technical assistance for grazing producers;

(B) the Federal budget precludes any significant expansion, and may force a reduction of, current levels of technical support; and

(C) farmers and ranchers have a history of cooperatively working together to address common needs in the promotion of their products and in the drainage of wet areas through drainage districts.

(2) ESTABLISHMENT OF GRAZING DEMONSTRATION.—The Secretary may establish 2 grazing management demonstration districts at the recommendation of the Grazing Lands Conservation Initiative Steering Committee.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) popcorn is an important food that is a valuable part of the human diet;

(2) the production and processing of popcorn plays a significant role in the economy of the United States in that popcorn is processed by several popcorn processors, distributed through wholesale and retail outlets, and consumed by millions of people throughout the United States and foreign countries;

(3) popcorn must be of high quality, readily available, handled properly, and marketed efficiently to ensure that the benefits of popcorn are available to the people of the United States;

(4) the maintenance and expansion of existing markets and uses and the development of new markets and uses for popcorn are vital to the welfare of processors and persons concerned with marketing, using, and producing popcorn for the market, as well as to the agricultural economy of the United States;

(5) the cooperative development, financing, and implementation of a coordinated program of popcorn promotion, research, consumer information, and industry information is necessary to maintain and expand markets for popcorn; and

(e) CONFIDENTIALITY.—The ballots and other information or reports that reveal, or tend to reveal, the vote of any person under this subtitle and the voting list shall be held strictly confidential and shall not be disclosed.

SEC. 952. SUSPENSION AND TERMINATION OF ORDER BY SECRETARY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—If the Secretary finds that an order issued under section 944, or a provision of the order, obstructs or does not tend to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle, the Secretary shall terminate or suspend the operation of the order or provision.

(b) LIMITATION.—The termination or suspension of any order, or any provision of an order, shall not be considered an order under this subtitle.

SEC. 953. REGULATIONS.

SEC. 954. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated such funds as are necessary to carry out this subtitle for each fiscal year.

Subtitle D—Commodity Promotion and Evaluation

SEC. 961. COMMODITY PROMOTION AND EVALUATION.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) it is in the national public interest and vital to the welfare of the agricultural economy of the United States to expand and develop markets for agricultural commodities through generic, industry-funded promotion programs;

(2) the programs play a unique role in advancing the demand for agricultural commodities, since the programs increase the total market for a product to the benefit of consumers and all producers;

(3) the programs complement branded advertising initiatives, which are aimed at increasing the market share of individual competitors;

(4) the programs are of particular benefit to small producers, who may lack the resources or market power to advertise on their own;

(5) the programs do not impede the branded advertising efforts of individual firms but instead increase market demand by methods that each individual entity would not have the incentive to employ;

(6) the programs, paid for by the producers who directly reap the benefits of the programs, provide a unique opportunity for agricultural producers to inform consumers about their products;

(7) it is important to ensure that the programs be carried out in an effective and coordinated manner that is designed to strengthen the position of the commodities in the marketplace and to maintain and expand the markets and uses of the commodities; and

(8) independent evaluation of the effectiveness of the programs will assist Congress and the Secretary of Agriculture in ensuring that the objectives of the programs are met.

(b) INDEPENDENT EVALUATIONS.—Except as otherwise provided by law, and at such intervals as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine, but not more frequently than every 3 years or 3 years after the establishment of a program, the Secretary shall require that each industry-funded generic promotion program authorized by Federal law for an agricultural commodity shall provide for an independent evaluation of the program and the effectiveness of the program. The evaluation may include an analysis of benefits, costs, and the efficacy of promotional and research efforts under the program. The evaluation shall be funded from industry assessments and made available to the public.

(c) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—The Secretary shall provide to Congress annually information on administrative expenses on programs referred to in subsection (b).

HAPPY ANNIVERSARY GRANITE CITY, IL

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, February 9, 1996

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask my colleagues to join me in honoring a prominent community in my district which is celebrating its 100th anniversary. On March 9, 1996, Granite City, IL, will celebrate its centennial at a special banquet at St. Gregory's Armenian Center.

The residents of Granite City make up a very proud community, one with a diverse ethnic makeup and hard-working reputation. The city is home to steel factories, medical centers, and meatpacking houses, as well as the Charles Melvin Price Army Support Center and a variety of excellent small businesses.

It has been my pleasure to represent Granite City in the Congress since I was elected in 1988. The local officials and residents are committed to making their community a better place to live, with improved schools, enhanced infrastructure, and opportunities for area residents to make a living and care for their families.

Together, we have worked to make the Price Center a strong military facility; secure funding to improve the McKinley Bridge; help area steel companies expand their factories; struggle through the great flood of 1993; and create more opportunities for local companies at the Tri-City Port District.

As Granite City looks to the future, its next 100 years, we can be assured that as long as the community continues to work together to achieve progress, opportunity lies ahead.

CHRIS J. WITTING RECOGNIZED AS CIVIC LEADER IN CENTRAL NEW YORK

HON. JAMES T. WALSH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, February 9, 1996

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a true civic leader, a man who has not only led the way for manufacturing interests in central New York but has touched the lives of thousands of his fellow citizens with his philanthropy, his counsel, and his encouragement.

Chris J. Witting, a former industrialist who headed Syracuse's Crouse-Hinds Corp. in its heyday, has been a personal inspiration to me and to many others in public life. An astute businessman, Chris Witting has been a model of success—even in what I call relative retirement.

His belief in the power of individuals and their positive-thinking has spurred many of us to boldly persevere in the formation of public policy that is in keeping with our values.

Chris Witting is loved and respected throughout central New York. I will honor him at a public event February 19 in our hometown of Syracuse, NY. I look forward to presenting him with a copy of this memorial, a small token of my personal gratitude for the great impetus he has given to progress in central New York.

I would ask my colleagues today to join me in saluting an American who has lived up to the expectations of the Founding Fathers when they called for strength of spirit and determination in all things in order to build a great Nation.

I offer thanks and congratulations to Chris Witting for his lifetime of dedication to our quality of life and our outstanding community.

SALUTE TO BANKS CONTRACTING CO., INC.

HON. KWEISI MFUME

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, February 9, 1996

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Banks Contracting Co., Inc., an African-American owned general contracting firm that specializes in commercial and industrial renovations.

As many residents or visitors to the Baltimore-Washington area can attest, Banks Contracting Co. has worked on some of the most important sites in the area constructed over the last 15 years. Sites to which Banks Construction has contributed include some of Baltimore's most famous and visited locales, including the National Aquarium, Camden Yards, and the Baltimore Arena. Banks is currently working on the Baltimore Children's Museum, which is slated to open in 1998. In addition to these well-known landmarks, past clients include the Johns Hopkins Hospital, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, NationsBank, the University of Maryland, Westinghouse, and Toyota, to name but a few.

In addition to these business successes, Banks also has a strong reputation within the community. The company has addressed the needs of the community throughout the years by serving as a mentor to young men and women in the construction field. Several of these young people, with financial and business assistance from Banks Construction Co., have moved on and established their own successful businesses.

In addition, Banks Construction is also a member of the Maryland/District of Columbia Minority Supplier Development Council and has, in the past, contributed its resources to the Contractor's College in Baltimore. In 1995, Banks was the key corporate sponsor for the Associated Black Charity's 10th Annual Fundraising Celebration and in 1994 it received the Administrator's Award for Excellence from the U.S. Small Business Administration. Banks has also been recognized in past years by Westinghouse and the Maryland/District of Columbia Minority Supplier Development Council.

And so, Mr. Speaker, I applaud Banks Construction Co. for its excellence not only as a contractor on some of Baltimore's most important projects, but also a member of our community, one that is willing to give some of its gifts back to its community.

TRIBUTE TO JOHN LAWRENCE, EDUCATOR

HON. CARRIE P. MEEK

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, February 9, 1996

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker. I rise to pay tribute to one of Florida's preeminent educational leaders upon his retirement from a 33-year-long career. A native of Durham, NC, Mr. John Lawrence began his professional career in 1963 after graduating from North Carolina Central University with a bachelor's degree in biological science.

While serving full-time as a teacher mentoring countless students at several high schools, Mr. Lawrence juggled his time to earn a master's degree in administration and supervision, while furthering his studies in marine biology at Florida State University and getting another master's degree in adult education at my alma mater, Florida A&M University.

In 1978 he joined the Florida Department of Education as program director of the adult and community education section. His stint in this endeavor proved to be one of the most productive enterprises of his professional career, resulting in his being named chief of the State Bureau of Adult and Community Education.

During his tenure Mr. Lawrence upgraded Florida's adult and community programs, raising them to preeminent prestige and innovation. He was awarded numerous accolades for his visionary leadership and educational entrepreneurship. His advice and counsel were sought by many national school boards and educational councils, giving incisive lectures on the subject of adult and community programs throughout the length and breadth of the educational spectrum. Most prominent among his varied roles was that a serving as a premiere consultant in the World Council on Adult Education in the then-Federal Republic of West Germany.

In 1990 the Council of State Education of Adult and Community Education chose him to serve as chairman. In this capacity the First Lady, Barbara Bush, tapped his expertise in her national adult literacy initiative, taking him regularly to the White House for consultation.

Despite his all-out involvement with Florida's educational initiatives, Mr. Lawrence found time to serve on the Teachers' Credit Union in Leon County, as well as fulfill chairmanships on the Code Enforcement Board of the city of Tallahassee, National Adult Education Professional Development Consortium, National Association of Secondary School Principals, and the National Advisory Committee of the GED Testing Program.

Throughout his career, Mr. Lawrence demonstrated the knack to solidify long-lasting friendships in his professional, civic, social and religious circles. Standing by him in his multifaceted endeavors is Virginia Landers Lawrence, his wife and confidante of 30 years. As proud parents they have instilled into their two sons, John Edward II and Jason Earl, the unerring standard of personal responsibility and moral commitment to the highest sense of self-worth and respect for their fellow human beings.

Mr. Lawrence is indeed the epitome of utmost dedication to the well-being of his family and his church, and personified a dogged determination in enhancing the educational initiatives in his chosen profession. He has become the trailblazer par excellence of our Nation's adult and community education, and his wise counsel in this arena will be sorely missed.

His retirement brings to a close the genuine dedication of one of Florida's unsung public servants. On this occasion I would like to extend my fellow Floridians' utmost gratitude to Mr. John Lawrence for a job well-done and a sterling achievement rarely matched among our Nation's visionaries in educational leadership.

CELEBRATING FEBRUARY 4, NATIONAL DAY FOR SRI LANKA

HON. PATSY T. MINK

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, February 9, 1996

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, I am very honored and pleased to have this opportunity to offer my heartfelt congratulations and best wishes to all of the citizens and friends of Sri Lanka as the country celebrated its National Day on February 4.

Sri Lanka has enjoyed independence from British colonial rule these past 48 years and exemplifies a political system and history steeped in democratic tradition. During the past four decades Sri Lanka has held regular national elections and has enjoyed traditionally friendly relations with the United States, based in large part on our shared commitment to democratic principles. Sri Lanka has experienced some ethnic strife related to Tamil separatists and we encourage newly elected President Chandrika Kumaratunga to find a peaceful and lasting solution to this conflict.

During the past half century, Sri Lanka has served as a glowing example of a young democratic country that has overcome numerous hardships to make tremendous strides in the political, international, economic, and cultural arena. Sri Lanka has much to be proud of. Of note is the high 90-percent literacy rate for both men and women which can be attributed to a Government policy of free public education from primary through the university. These policies will create and foster a vigorous economy and strengthen even further our trade relationship.

Happy Fourth of February to Sri Lanka on its National Day.

REPORT ON DEVELOPMENTS CONCERNING NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO ORGANIZATIONS THAT THREATEN TO DISRUPT THE MIDDLE EAST PEACE PROCESS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 104–173)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on International Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I hereby report to the Congress on the developments concerning the national emergency with respect to organizations that threaten to disrupt the Middle East peace process that was declared in Executive Order No. 12947 of January 23, 1995. This report is submitted pursuant to section 401(c) of the National Emergencies Act, 50 U.S.C. 1641(c), and section 204(c) of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act (IEEPA), 50 U.S.C. 1703(c).

1. On January 23, 1995, I signed Executive Order 12947, "Prohibiting Transactions with Terrorists Who Threaten to Disrupt the Middle East Peace Process" (the "order") (60 Fed. Reg. 5079, January 25, 1995). The order blocks all property subject to U.S. jurisdiction in which there is any interest of 12 terrorist organizations that threaten the Middle East peace process as identified in an Annex to the order. The order also blocks the property and interests in property subject to U.S. jurisdiction of persons designated by the Secretary of State, in coordination with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General, who are found (1) to have committed, or to pose a significant risk of committing, acts of violence that have the purpose or effect of disrupting the Middle East peace process, or (2) to assist in, sponsor or provide financial, material, or technological support for, or services in support of, such acts of violence. In addition, the order blocks all property and interests in property subject to U.S. jurisdiction in which there is any interest of persons determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, in coordination with the Secretary of State and the Attorney General, to be owned or controlled by, or to act for or on behalf of, any other person designated pursuant to the order (collectively "Specially Designated Terrorists" or "STDs").

The order further prohibits any transaction or dealing by a United States person or within the United States in property or interests in property of SDTs, including the making or receiving of any contribution of funds, goods, or services to or for the benefit of such persons. This prohibition includes donations that are intended to relieve human suffering.

Designations of persons blocked pursuant to the order are effective upon the date of determination by the Secretary of State or his delegate, or the Director of the Office of Foreign Assets Control (FAC) acting under authority delegated by the Secretary of the Treasury. Public notice of blocking is effective upon the date of filing with the Federal Register, or upon prior actual notice.

2. On January 25, 1995, the Department of the Treasury issued a notice listing persons blocked pursuant to Executive Order No. 12947 who have been designated by the President as terrorist organizations threatening the Middle East peace process or who have been found to be owned or controlled by, or to be acting for or on behalf of, these terrorist organizations (60 Fed. Reg. 5084, January 25, 1995). The notice identified 31 entities that act for or on behalf of the 12 Middle East terrorist organizations listed in the Annex to Executive Order No. 12947, as well as 18 individuals who are leaders or representatives of these groups. In addition the notice provides 9 name variations or pseudonyms used by the 18 individuals identified. The list identifies blocked persons who have been found to have committed, or to pose a risk of committing, acts of violence that have the purpose of disrupting the Middle East peace process or to have assisted in, sponsored, or provided financial, material or technological support for, or service in support of, such acts of violence, or are owned or controlled by, or to act for or on behalf of other blocked persons. The Department of the Treasury issued three additional notices adding the names of three individuals, as well as their pseudonyms, to the List of STDs (60 Fed. Reg. 41152–53, August 11, 1995; 60 Fed. Reg. 44932–33, August 29, 1995; and 60 Fed. Reg. 58435–36, November 27, 1995). Copies of the notices are attached to this report. The FAC, in coordination with the Secretary of State and the Attorney General, is continuing to expand the list of Specially Designated Terrorists, including both organizations and individuals, as additional information is developed.

3. The expenses incurred by the Federal Government in the 6-month period from July 23, 1995, through January 22, 1996, that are directly attributable to the exercise of powers and authorities conferred by the declaration of the national emergency with respect to organizations that disrupt the Middle East peace process are estimated at approximately $2.6 million. (The expenses for the previous period, incorrectly stated in the report of July 27, 1995, to be approximately $55,000, were about $2.5 million.) Personnel costs were largely centered in the Department of the Treasury (particularly in the Office of Foreign Assets Control, the Office of the General Counsel, and the U.S. Customs Service), the Department of State, and the Department of Justice.

4. Executive Order No. 12947 provides this Administration with a new tool for combating fundraising in this country on behalf of organizations that use terror to undermine the Middle East peace process. The order makes it harder for such groups to finance these criminal activities by cutting off their access to sources of support in the United States and to U.S. financial facilities. It is also intended to reach charitable contributions to designated organizations and individuals to preclude diversion of such donations to terrorist activities.

In addition, the Congress has pending before it comprehensive counterterrorism legislation proposed by the Administration that would strengthen our ability to prevent terrorist acts, identify those who carry them out, and bring them to justice. The combination of Executive Order No. 12947 and the proposed legislation demonstrate the U.S. determination to confront and combat those who would seek to destroy the Middle East peace process, and our commitment to the global fight against terrorism.

I shall continue to exercise the powers at my disposal to apply economic sanctions against extremists seeking to destroy the hopes of peaceful coexistence between Arabs and Israelis as long as these measures are appropriate, and will continue to report periodically to the Congress on significant developments pursuant to 50 U.S.C. 1703(c).

WILLIAM J. CLINTON.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

OFFICE OF THE CLERK,
U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, February 13, 1996.

Hon. NEWT GINGRICH,
The Speaker, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted in Clause 5 of Rule III of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, I have the honor to transmit a sealed envelope received from the White House on Friday, February 9 at 11:45 a.m. and said to contain a message from the President whereby he notifies the Congress that Japan has conducted whaling activities that diminish the effectiveness of the International Whaling Commission with respect to minke whales.

With warm regards,

ROBIN H. CARLE,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

REPORT ON ACTIVITIES OF JAPAN'S DIMINISHING EFFECTIVENESS OF THE INTERNATIONAL WHALING COMMISSION CONSERVATION PROGRAM—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 104–174)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, without objection, referred to the Committee on International Relations and the Committee on Resources and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

On December 11, 1995, Secretary of Commerce Ronald Brown certified under section 8 of the Fishermen's Protective Act of 1967, as amended (the "Pelly Amendment") (22 U.S.C. 1978), that Japan has conducted research whaling activities that diminish the effectiveness of the International Whaling Commission (IWC) conservation program. This message constitutes my report to the Congress pursuant to subsection (b) of the Pelly Amendment.

The certification of the Secretary of Commerce was based on Japanese research whaling activities in both the North Pacific and the Southern Ocean Whale Sanctuary. In 1994, Japan expanded its research whaling activities into the North Pacific by permitting the taking of 100 minke whales, 21 of which were taken. The IWC found that this North Pacific whaling failed to satisfy applicable criteria for lethal research and was therefore inconsistent with the IWC's conservation program. Nevertheless, Japan continued its whaling activities in the North Pacific, taking 100 minke whales in 1995. In addition, during 1995, Japan increased the number of minke whales to be harvested in the Southern Ocean Whale Sanctuary by 33 percent, despite a 1994 finding by the IWC that this lethal research program did not meet all applicable criteria.

In his letter to me of December 11, 1995, Secretary Brown conveyed his concerns not only over the whales that have been killed in this program to date but also over any further expansion of lethal research. While noting that the Japanese have informed us they have no plans for a further expansion of lethal research in the Southern Ocean Whale Sanctuary, he expressed particular concern over whaling activity in that area. I share these concerns.

At this stage, I do not believe that the use of trade sanctions is the most constructive approach to resolving our differences over research whaling activities with the Government of Japan.

However, I have instructed the Department of State to convey my very strong concerns to the Government of Japan. We will also vigorously pursue high-level efforts to persuade Japan to reduce the number of whales killed in its research program and act consistently with the IWC conservation program. We hope to achieve significant progress on these issues by the beginning of the next Antarctic whaling season and will keep these issues under review. I have instructed the Department of Commerce to continue to monitor closely Japan's research whaling and to report promptly on any further inconsistencies between Japanese whaling activities and the guidelines of the IWC conservation program.

WILLIAM J. CLINTON.

REPORT ON CONTINUING NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO IRAQ—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 104-175)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, without objection, referred to the Committee on International Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I hereby report to the Congress on the developments since my last report of August 1, 1995, concerning the national emergency with respect to Iraq that was declared in Executive Order No. 12722 of August 2, 1990. This report is submitted pursuant to section 401(c) of the National Emergencies Act, 50 U.S.C. 1641(c), and section 204(c) of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act, 50 U.S.C. 1703(c).

Executive Order No. 12722 ordered the immediate blocking of all property and interests in property of the Government of Iraq (including the Central Bank of Iraq) then or thereafter located in the United States or within the possession or control of a U.S. person. That order also prohibited the importation into the United States of goods and services of Iraqi origin, as well as the exportation of goods, services, and technology from the United States to Iraq. The order prohibited travel-related transactions to or from Iraq and the performance of any contract in support of any industrial, commercial, or governmental project in Iraq. U.S. persons were also prohibited from granting or extending credit or loans to the Government of Iraq.

The foregoing prohibitions (as well as the blocking of Government of Iraq property) were continued and augmented on August 9, 1990, by Executive Order No. 12724, which was issued in order to align the sanctions imposed by the United States with United Nations Security Council Resolution 661 of August 6, 1990.

Executive Order No. 12817 was issued on October 21, 1992, to implement in the United States measures adopted in United Nations Security Council Resolution 778 of October 2, 1992. Resolution 778 requires U.N. Member States to transfer to a U.N. escrow account any funds (up to $200 million apiece) representing Iraqi oil sale proceeds paid by purchasers after the imposition of U.N. sanctions on Iraq, to finance Iraq's obligations for U.N. activities with respect to Iraq, such as expenses to verify Iraqi weapons destruction, and to provide humanitarian assistance in Iraq on a nonpartisan basis. A portion of the escrowed funds also funds the activities of the U.N. Compensation Commission in Geneva, which handles claims from victims of the Iraqi invasion and occupation of Kuwait. Member States also may make voluntary contributions to the account. The funds placed in the escrow account are to be returned, with interest, to the Member States that transferred them to the United Nations, as funds are received from future sales of Iraqi oil authorized by the U.N. Security Council. No Member State is required to fund more than half of the total transfers or contributions to the escrow account.

This report discusses only matters concerning the national emergency with respect to Iraq that was declared in Executive Order No. 12722 and matters relating to Executive Orders No. 12724 and 12817 (the "Executive orders"). The report covers events from August 2, 1995, through February 1, 1996.

1. During the reporting period, there were no amendments to the Iraqi Sanctions Regulations.

2. The Department of the Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control (FAC) continues its involvement in lawsuits seeking to prevent the unauthorized transfer of blocked Iraqi assets. In Consarc Corporation v. Iraqi Ministry of Industry and Minerals, No. 94-5390 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 15, 1995), the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit issued its second opinion in this case, finding in FAC's favor on all issues presented to the court. The court ordered the district court judge to direct Consarc Corporation to restore the status quo by returning $6.4 million plus interest to the blocked Iraqi government account from which it was withdrawn after the district court erroneously held that these funds were not blocked Iraqi government property. The court also found that the unsold furnace manufactured for the Iraqi government and sales proceeds of a second furnace were blocked property. Finally, the court reversed the district court's ruling that Consarc held a specific claim against a blocked Iraqi government account for $6.4 million, holding that any claim Consarc had against the Government of Iraq was as a general creditor only.

Investigations of possible violations of the Iraqi sanctions continue to be pursued and appropriate enforcement actions taken. Several cases from prior reporting periods are continuing and recent additional allegations have been referred by FAC to the U.S. Customs Service for investigation. Additional FAC civil penalty notices were prepared during the reporting period for violations of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act and Iraqi Sanctions Regulations with respect to transactions involving Iraq. One de minimis penalty has been collected from an organization for unlicensed exports in violation of the prohibitions against transactions involving Iraq. Several other penalty proceedings are pending completion.

3. Investigation also continues into the roles played by various individuals and firms outside Iraq in the Iraqi government procurement network. These investigations may lead to additions to FAC's listing of individuals and organizations determined to be Specially Designated Nationals (SDNs) of the Government of Iraq.

4. Pursuant to Executive Order No. 12817 implementing United Nations Security Council Resolution 778, on October 26, 1992, FAC directed the Federal Reserve Bank of New York to establish a blocked account for receipt of certain post-August 6, 1990, Iraqi oil sales proceeds, and to hold, invest, and transfer these funds as required by the order. On September 5, 1995, following payments by the Governments of Australia ($216,360.00), Denmark ($168,985.00), Japan ($4,075,000.00), The Netherlands ($4,168,745.47), New Zealand ($67,050.00), Switzerland ($265,108.20), and by the European Union ($647,463.31), respectively, to the special United Nations-controlled account, entitled "United Nations Security Council Resolution 778 Escrow Account," the Federal Reserve Bank of New York was directed to transfer a corresponding amount of $9,606,711.98 from the blocked account it holds to the United Nations-controlled account. Similarly, on October 30, 1995, following the payment of $1,504,000.00 by the European Community, and payments by the Governments of Germany ($355,871.89), The Netherlands ($698,348.13), Norway ($199,983.00), and the United Kingdom ($2,188,992.67), the Federal Reserve Bank of New York was directed to transfer a corresponding amount of $6,947,195.69 to the United Nations-controlled account. Finally, on December 21, 1995, following the payment of $3,062,197.28 by the European Union, and payments by the Governments of the Netherlands ($1,922,719.00), Sweden ($4,223,178.20), and the United Kingdom ($208,600.44), the Federal Reserve Bank of New York was directed to transfer the amount of $8,313,066.13 to the United Nations-controlled account. Cumulative transfers from the blocked Federal Reserve Bank of New York account since issuance of Executive Order No. 12817 now have amounted to $200 million, fully satisfying the U.S. commitment to match the payments of other Member States from blocked Iraqi oil payments, and its obligation pursuant to United Nations Security Council Resolution 778.

5. The Office of Foreign Assets Control has issued a total of 618 specific licenses regarding transactions pertaining to Iraq or Iraqi assets since August 1990. Licenses have been issued for transactions such as the filing of legal actions against Iraqi governmental entities, legal representation of Iraq, and the exportation to Iraq of donated medicine, medical supplies, food intended for humanitarian relief purposes, the execution of powers of attorney relating to the administration of personal assets and decedents' estates in Iraq and the protection of preexistent intellectual property rights in Iraq. Since my last report, 28 specific licenses have been issued.

6. The expenses incurred by the Federal Government in the 6-month period from August 2, 1995, through February 1, 1996, that are directly attributable to the exercise of powers and authorities conferred by the declaration of a national emergency with respect to Iraq are reported to be about $1.6 million, most of which represents wage and salary costs for Federal personnel. Personnel costs were largely centered in the Department of the Treasury (particularly in the Office of Foreign Assets Control, the U.S. Customs Service, the Office of the Under Secretary for Enforcement, and the Office of the General Counsel), the Department of State (particularly the Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs, the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs, the Bureau of International Organization Affairs, the Bureau of Political-Military Affairs, the U.S. Mission to the United Nations, and the Office of the Legal Adviser), and the Department of Transportation (particularly the U.S. Coast Guard).

7. The United States imposed economic sanctions on Iraq in response to Iraq's illegal invasion and occupation of Kuwait, a clear act of brutal aggression. The United States, together with the international community, is maintaining economic sanctions against Iraq because the Iraqi regime has failed to comply fully with United Nations Security Council resolutions. Security Council resolutions on Iraq call for the elimination of Iraqi weapons of mass destruction, Iraqi recognition of Kuwait, and the inviolability of the Iraq-Kuwait boundary, the release of Kuwaiti and other third-country nationals, compensation for victims of Iraqi aggression, long-term monitoring of weapons of mass destruction capabilities, the return of Kuwaiti assets stolen during Iraq's illegal occupation of Kuwait, renunciation of terrorism, an end to internal Iraqi repression of its own civilian population, and the facilitation of access of international relief organizations to all those in need in all parts of Iraq. More than 5 years after the invasion, a pattern of defiance persists: a refusal to account for missing Kuwaiti detainees; failure to return Kuwaiti property worth millions of dollars, including military equipment that was used by Iraq in its movement of troops to the Kuwaiti border in October 1994; sponsorship of assassinations in Lebanon and in northern Iraq; incomplete declarations to weapons inspectors; and ongoing widespread human rights violations. As a result, the U.N. sanctions remain in place; the United States will continue to enforce those sanctions under domestic authority.

The Baghdad government continues to violate basic human rights of its own citizens through systematic repression of minorities and denial of humanitarian assistance. The Government of Iraq has repeatedly said it will not be bound by United Nations Security Council Resolution 688. For more than 4 years, Baghdad has maintained a blockade of food, medicine, and other humanitarian supplies against northern Iraq. The Iraqi military routinely harasses residents of the north, and has attempted to "Arabize" the Kurdish, Turcomen, and Assyrian areas in the north. Iraq has not relented in its artillery attacks against civilian population centers in the south, or in its burning and draining operations in the southern marshes, which have forced thousands to flee to neighboring States.

In April 1995, the U.N. Security Council adopted Resolution 986 authorizing Iraq to export limited quantities of oil (up to $1 billion per quarter) under U.N. supervision in order to finance the purchase of food, medicine, and other humanitarian supplies. The resolution includes arrangements to ensure equitable distribution of such assistance to all the people of Iraq. The resolution also provides for the payment of compensation to victims of Iraqi aggression and for the funding of other U.N. activities with respect to Iraq. Resolution 986 was carefully crafted to address the issues raised by Iraq to justify its refusal to implement similar humanitarian resolutions adopted in 1991 (Resolutions 706 and 712), such as oil export routes and questions of national sovereignty. Nevertheless, Iraq refused to implement this humanitarian measure. This only reinforces our view that Saddam Hussein is unconcerned about the hardships suffered by the Iraqi people.

The policies and actions of the Saddam Hussein regime continue to pose an unusual and extraordinary threat to the national security and foreign policy of the United States, as well as to the regional peace and security. The U.N. resolutions affirm that the Security Council be assured of Iraq's peaceful intentions in judging its compliance with sanctions. Because of Iraq's failure to comply fully with these resolutions, the United States will continue to apply economic sanctions to deter it from threatening peace and stability in the region.

WILLIAM J. CLINTON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 9, 1996.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY TO ABRAHAM LINCOLN, THE HONORABLE CONSTANCE MORELLA, AND THE PARLIAMENTARIAN

(Mr. MONTGOMERY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Madam Speaker, I have been informed that yesterday was your birthday and also the Parliamentarian's birthday, and as all Americans know, February 12 is Abraham Lincoln's birthday also. So, congratulations from one Member of the House, and we are very, very proud of you.

It is true that it is a birthday shared with the 16th President of the United States, and in this Chamber we might be reminded that in President Lincoln's first inaugural, he said, "Let us be inspired by the better angels of our nature," and the gentleman from Mississippi exemplifies that.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

SALUTE TO CALIFORNIA'S RIO AMERICANO HIGH SCHOOL

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 13, 1996

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join with the U.S. Department of Education in saluting Sacramento, California's Rio Americano High School for recently winning recognition as one of our Nation's blue ribbon schools.

I am proud to have such a model institution within my district. For many years, the school's administration, faculty, students, and parents have devoted their collaborative efforts toward the construction of a school and student body which exceeds local, State, and national goals for educating all of its students.

Rio Americano's recognition is well-deserved and its students' phenomenal success underscores the positive results other schools can enjoy by adopting the principles of GOALS 2000: Educate America.

As testament to its success, the school boasts a dropout rate of 0.3 percent and students graduating from Rio Americano are extraordinarily competitive; 94 percent were accepted at the college or university of their choice in 1994.

The proximity to the State capitol provides Rio Americano with a highly motivated, informed community with expectations of excellence in education and the willingness to become partners in the realization of that goal.

Students take an active role in the setting of goals and priorities for the school, as well as discussions which address the implementation of these goals and priorities. This approach fosters the development of sound character, democratic values, ethical judgment, good behavior, and the ability to work in a self-disciplined and purposeful manner. The results are evident in the students' successful roles in a highly active student government, the operation of the school's radio and television stations, the production of the newspaper and yearbook, the planning of rallies and assemblies, the operation of clubs, and the chairing of meetings of student representative groups.

Parents of Rio Americano students logged 8,837 volunteer hours at the school last year alone. They are actively involved in the development of programs, representing the interests of the community, and raising resources which enable the students to participate in enriching experiences within and beyond the classroom. As part of their extensive involvement, parents are responsible for the development and management of several model programs for facilitating the exit of seniors from the schools.

Finally, the school is fortunate to enjoy the outstanding leadership of its principal, Dr. Ronald Uzelac and his dedicated faculty of educators. Together, they have structured the school to take advantage of the strengths of our community, creating and facilitating forums for staff, students, and parents to work together to examine, debate, and develop programs which draw upon these strengths.

One such program gaining acclaim is Academia Civitas, a political academy which takes advantage of our location in the State capital by establishing a partnership with local political and educational communities. Students follow a specialized curriculum developed by study teams which prepare them to be politically aware citizens able to compete in and contribute to a global society. The academy requires community service, parent involvement, and an internship with one of the many volunteer agencies in our political community.

The State of California has recognized Rio Americano's excellence by honoring the school three times with the Distinguished School Award in 1988 and 1994 and the Sustained Achievement Award in 1990.

Again, I would like to take this opportunity to salute the tremendous efforts on the part of Rio Americano High School's administration, faculty, students, and parents. I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing this model public school and in wishing Rio Americano many years of continued success.

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

HON. BARBARA B. KENNELLY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 13, 1996

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, each February, those of us who serve in Congress have the occasion to rediscover a rich history that has been carefully chronicled by educator and historian, Dr. Carter Woodson, the father of Black History Month. This year, our focus is on African-American women, their past, present, and future.

As a group, these women have made remarkable contributions to this Nation. As individuals, they have enriched lives. Over and over, their stories speak to the strength behind the struggle; to the courage that leads to triumph; to the vision that leads to victory.

This year, our Nation mourned the death of Barbara Jordan, a true champion of the Constitution. She made history from the moment she was elected to Congress as the first African-American from the South to serve since Reconstruction. With her passionate commitment to law, her burning sense of justice, and above all, a voice that spoke truth, she exemplified the spirit of African-American women.

But such heroines are found in all walks of life, and not just in Washington, but in towns and cities across the country. I am proud that Connecticut's First Congressional District is home to so many remarkable African-American women.

Some made their mark with community activism, like the late Isabelle Blake, founder of Connecticut's African-American Day Parade; Ella Cromwell; and Blanche Jackson. Some are outstanding educators, like Dr. Edythe Gaines of the Connecticut State Board of Education and Eileen Baccus, president of Northwestern Community Technical College.

Some have served in the political world, like Alred Dyce of the Bloomfield Town Council; Carrie Saxon Perry, who broke barriers as the first African-American woman elected to lead a northeastern city; Annette Carter and Marie Lopez Kirkley-Bey, who serve in the State legislature today; and Veronica Airey-Wilson, who serves on the Hartford City Council. There are government professionals, like the city manager of Hartford, Saundra Kee Borges, and the city treasurer, Denise Nappier, and those who sit on the bench, like State Superior Court Judge Curtissa Cofield.

Some inspire us with creativity, like Dollie McLean, founder and executive director of the artist collective. Others take the lead in business, like Kyle Ballou of Fleet Bank. Some we depend on for our news, like Gayle King, WFSB-TV 3 news anchor. And some have sent our spirits soaring—like Nakisha Sales of the 1994–95 NCAA Champion UCONN women's basketball team.

It has been said that history is not what happened, but what is remembered. In this month, we seek to ensure that this precious history and these unique accomplishments are preserved forever.

THE BLUE RIBBON SCHOOL AWARD

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 13, 1996

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor to rise today to commend Wilbur Wright Middle School, and its principal, Mr. Donald Guske, and Munster High School, and its principal, Dr. Kevin McCaffrey, for having been awarded the Blue Ribbon School Award. Both schools are located in Munster, IN.

Blue ribbon schools have been judged to be particularly constructive in meeting local, State, and national goals. These schools also display the qualities of excellence that are necessary to prepare our young people for the challenges of the next century. According to the U.S. Department of Education, which issues this award, blue ribbon school status is awarded to schools that have: strong leadership; a clear vision and sense of mission that is shared by all connected with the school; high quality teaching; challenging up-to-date curricula; policies and practices that ensure a safe environment conducive to learning; a solid commitment to parental involvement; and evidence that the school helps all students achieve a quality education.

State education departments, the Department of Defense Dependent Schools, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the Council for American Private Education, review schools in depth to determine which schools meet the high standards of the award. Following the screening process, the nominations are forwarded to the U.S. Department of Education. At this point, a panel of 100 outstanding educators and other professionals review the nominations, select the schools for site visits, and make recommendations to the Secretary of Education. These schools will be honored at a national ceremony in Washington, DC, this spring.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my other distinguished colleagues to join me in commending Wilbur Wright Middle School and Munster High School for a job well done. The teachers and administrators of these two schools make Indiana's First Congressional District a better place in which to live and work. There is no greater success than to successfully educate our children.

H.R. 2963, THE KEEP THE GOVERNMENT OPEN ACT OF 1996

HON. CARRIE P. MEEK

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 13, 1996

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the recent shutdown of the Federal Government wasted 1 billion taxpayer dollars. In January Congress passed and the President signed a continuing resolution that paid 285,000 Federal employees who were not able to work between December 16 and January 5 because of the 3-week lapse in appropriations for part of the Federal Government. This shutdown also imposed a serious financial hardship on many of the 476,000 Federal workers who were not paid during this period even though they were working.

The shutdown of the Federal Government hurt many private firms, both those that normally sell to Federal employees and those that have Federal contracts. They were unable to recoup the business lost during the shutdown.

Last week I introduced a bipartisan bill to prevent such harmful consequences if there should be another lapse in appropriations in the future. H.R. 2963, the Keep the Government Open Act of 1996, amends that Anti-Deficiency Act to permit Federal employees to continue to work and to be paid during a lapse in appropriations, if the President determines that a sufficient appropriation is likely to be made before the end of the fiscal year.

The other original consponsors of this bill are Mr. DAVIS, Mr. HOYER, Mr. MORAN, Ms. NORTON, and Mr. WYNN.

I urge my colleagues to support this insurance against another failure to enact appropriations bills or continuing resolutions for the entire Government.

THE MONEY PLANE

HON. CHARLES E. SCHUMER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 13, 1996

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, a weekly magazine recently published a lengthy article raising serious questions about the business activities conducted by Republic National Bank of New York with Russian banks. Republic is a large, well-respected institution serving the New York community and employing thousands of its residents. In the interest of fairness, so that the other side of the story can be heard, I would like to submit for the RECORD the attached materials. Included among them are several letters from law enforcement agencies and bank regulatory bodies. These letters testify to the bank's record of compliance with the law and cooperation with law enforcement officials and bank regulators.

COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
ADMINISTRATOR OF NATIONAL BANKS,
Washington, DC, January 17, 1996.

WALTER H. WEINER,
Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, Republic National Bank of New York, New York, NY.

DEAR MR. WEINER: Thank you for your letter drawing my attention to the article entitled "The Money Plane" in the January 22, 1996 issue of New York magazine. The article concerns sales of U.S. dollars to Russian banks by Republic Bank and includes several statements attributed to an unnamed OCC official.

We doubt that those statements were in fact made by an OCC official. However, if they were made, please be assured that the statements were unauthorized and do not represent the views of this office. More specifically, these statements do not reflect the OCC's position concerning Republic Bank's bank note detailings with Russian banks.

As you are aware, the OCC supervises and regulates all national banks, including those that have substantial bank note dealings with Russian banks. As part of our oversight, we monitor the bank note activities of those banks, including Republic. We are satisfied that Republic's bank note activities are conducted in a manner consistent with the applicable laws we administer.

Sincerely,
EUGENE A. LUDWIG,
Comptroller of the Currency.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY,
Washington, DC, February 1, 1996.

WALTER H. WEINER,
Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, Republic National Bank of New York, New York, N.Y.

DEAR MR. WEINER: The Attorney General received your letter dated January 15, 1996, calling attention to an article entitled "The Money Plane" in the January 22, 1996 issue of New York magazine. She also received a letter from Republic National Bank Deputy General Counsel, Anne T. Vitale, concerning that same article. The Attorney General asked this Office to investigate the issues raised in the two letters and respond to you.

"The Money Plane" discusses sales of U.S. dollars by Republic National Bank to various banks in Russia. The article contains a statement attributed to an Assistant United States Attorney (AUSA) about certain accounts at Republic National Bank.

I wish to assure you that the statements attributed to the AUSA do not represent the views of the Department of Justice. More specifically, the attributed statements do not reflect any position of the Department of Justice on Republic National Bank's banknote transactions with Russian banks.

Sincerely,
MICHAEL E. SHAHEEN, Jr.,
Counsel.

THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY,
COUNTY OF NEW YORK,
January 16, 1996.

THE EDITOR,
New York Magazine,
New York, NY.

TO THE EDITOR: I read the article entitled "The Money Plane" in the January 22, 1996 issue of New York magazine. It does raise a reasonable question about our Government's policy to permit and facilitate the sale of U.S. dollars by American and foreign banks to Russian banks. I was surprised, however, by the suggestion that it is improper for Republic National Bank to engage in this practice as well as the article's utter failure to mention that other reputable and well-known banks also engage in similar transactions.

The fact is that the U.S. Treasury, the Federal Reserve System and the State Department approve and facilitate the sale of dollars by American banks to Russian banks. Indeed, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York sells dollars with the knowledge that they are going to be resold to Russian banks. Additionally, the banks who purchase and resell the dollars file reports on each transaction with the Federal Reserve System, the United States Treasury Department, U.S. Customs and the Controller of the Currency. These are not covert transactions.

Finally, under current law, banks which buy dollars in New York and resell them to Russian banks are not required to and, indeed are unable to know, the identity of the Russian banks' customers. Republic, in fact, sells only to banks licensed by the Russian Central Bank. Unless a bank has specific information of criminal control of a Russian bank, a U.S. bank may sell banknotes to Russian banks.

My office has aggressively investigated money laundering cases for many years and does so on a regular and continuous basis. As a routine matter, we have looked at Republic's sale of dollars to Russian banks and found no evidence of misconduct or wrongdoing by Republic.

Sincerely,
ROBERT M. MORGENTHAU.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
BANKING DEPARTMENT,
New York, NY, February 1, 1996.

Mr. WALTER H. WEINER,
Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, Republic National Bank of New York, New York, NY.

DEAR MR. WEINER: This letter responds to your recent letter to me enclosing a copy of the "The Money Plane" article in the January 22, 1996 issue of New York Magazine, together with copies of the January 16, 1996 letter to you from the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the January 17, 1996 letter to New York Magazine from Robert M. Morgenthau, the District Attorney for New York County and the January 24, 1996 letter to Republic National Bank of New York ("Republic") Senior Vice President Vitale from FINCEN Director Morris. Each of these letters relates to that article.

New York Magazine's article concerns, among other things, sales of U.S. dollars to Russian banks by Republic. It includes some purported quotations and statements of unnamed sources said to be former employees of this Department who then had law enforcement investigation responsibilities.

You can be assured that if, and to the extent that, such statements may have been made by former employees of this Department, they have not been authorized to be made by this Department, were made without our awareness and do not constitute, in any manner, statements or positions of the New York State Banking Department in respect of Republic or with regard to banknotes dealings with Russian banks by Republic and other banks.

Moreover, it is the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency, and not this Department, which has been and continues to be the primary bank regulator of Republic. Thus, in the course of our functions, we do not examine Republic, nor have we conducted an investigation directed at Republic in respect of its banknotes dealings with Russian banks.

Very truly yours,

——— ———.

FINANCIAL CRIMES
ENFORCEMENT NETWORK,
Vienna, VA, January 24, 1996.

ANNE T. VITALE, Esq.,
Senior Vice President and Deputy General Counsel, Republic National Bank of New York, New York, NY.

DEAR ANNE: Your letter to me, dated January 17, 1996, concerned an article entitled "The Money Plane" in the January 22 issue of New York Magazine. That article dealt, in part, with the sale of American currency to banks in Russia by Republic National Bank of New York ("Republic").

As you point out in your letter, the shipment of bank notes by United States banks to other banks, in Russia or anywhere else, is permitted by U.S. law and there is nothing inherently illegal about such activities. The New York article was certainly unfair in suggesting otherwise. Furthermore, we have never encountered a money laundering scheme which seeks to convert assets already in financial institutions into bank notes.

Banks such as Republic, with a history of strong compliance programs and valuable cooperation with law enforcement authorities in this country, can be expected to recognize the risks of particular transactions in their efforts to avoid becoming ensnared in wrongdoing. Republic has indeed, as your letter also points out, been supplying voluntary reports to federal law enforcement of its shipments of bank notes to Russia and other countries in an effort to assist U.S. authorities.

Our program of partnership with the financial community relies on highly experienced officials such as you and banks such as Republic to carry out our law enforcement mission. I look forward to continuing to work with you in the fight against money laundering.

With best wishes.

Sincerely,

STANLEY E. MORRIS,
Director.

AKIN, GUMP, STRAUSS, HAUER
& FELD, L.L.P., ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
Washington, DC, January 29, 1996.

EDITOR, New York,
K-III Magazine Corporation,
New York, NY.

DEAR SIR: The article entitled "The Money Plane" in your January 22, 1996 issue of New York magazine misleads your readers by relying on anonymous innuendo to impeach the integrity of respected U.S. banks. As a former Ambassador to Russia, I have seen firsthand the importance of selling dollars to Russian banks: U.S. currency helps to stabilize the Russian economy as that nation's political leadership struggles to modernize and democratize their country and that in the best interests of the U.S. and the free world.

The circulation of the U.S. currency in Russia is an important element of U.S. trade and foreign policy. Through banknote and other transactions, U.S. banks remain engaged with their Russian counterparts, introduce them to and reinforce the high standards of the international banking system, and prevent the sort of economic isolation that could undermine the continuing development of Russia's financial system. Providing a steady supply of U.S. currency to Russian banks is perhaps the single most efficient form of support the U.S. can offer any country in a position as delicate as Russia's. Not to be overlooked is the fact that this banking activity also opens important avenues of commerce between Russia and the West.

Your article alleges that U.S. banks, Republic National Bank in particular, knowingly conduct banknote transactions with Russian banks that are controlled by or associated with organized crime. No one can deny that crime and corruption are today among the greatest threats to the creation of a modern democracy in Russia. However, while I am no expert on the subject, my understanding is that all banknote transactions between U.S. and Russian banks are conducted in strict accordance with the reporting and "know-your-customer" evidence to the contrary. The fact is that the U.S. banks that handle banknote transactions, with Russia or any other country, monitor to the best of their ability the activities of the banks with which they do business, continuously seek reliable information regarding the integrity of those institutions, and will discontinue transactions with any institution that government authorities indicate is involved in criminal activity. Furthermore, I know of no instances where federal banking or law enforcement officials have indicated that there are Russian banks with whom business should be discontinued.

As far as criminal activity in Russia is concerned, it should be stopped by increasing the resources and capabilities of Russian law enforcement and continuing the cooperation that exists between U.S. and Russian authorities.

You did a disservice to your readers and I hope that, as a matter of integrity, you will publicly apologize and correct your misstatements that I am sure were inadvertent.

Respectfully,

ROBERT S. STRAUSS.

At a press conference on January 18, 1996, United States Ambassador to Russia, Thomas Pickering stated:

American and international banks who are depositories with the federal reserve system will be the principal conduits, may be as many as a dozen of those bringing money here to Russia, where it will be redistributed through their arrangements with the Russian banking system into the Russian system to meet the demands that people will have in this country for new dollars.

* * * * *

We do not believe that activities taken through the currency provide an effective remedy for money laundering or the use of currency in criminal activities and, indeed, suggestions that this be done, in our view, would produce greater negative effects on the stability of worldwide currency systems than they would produce benefits in attacking the criminal culture. . . .

ECONOMIC REPORT OF PRESIDENT AND ANNUAL REPORT OF COUNCIL OF ECONOMIC ADVISORS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 104–161)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection referred to the Joint Economic Committee and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Fifty years ago, the Congress passed and President Truman signed the Employment Act of 1946, which committed the U.S. Government to promote policies designed to create employment opportunities for all Americans. I am proud that my Administration has made President Truman's commitment a reality. Over the past 3 years, we have created a sound economic foundation to face the challenges of the 21st century.

STRONG ECONOMIC PERFORMANCE

Overall, the American economy is healthy and strong. In the first 3 years of this Administration nearly 8 million jobs were created, 93 percent of them in the private sector. The so-called "misery index"—the sum of the inflation and unemployment rates—fell last year to its lowest level since 1968. Investment has soared, laying the basis for future higher economic growth. New business incorporations have set a record, and exports of American-made goods have grown rapidly. Ours is the strongest and most competitive economy in the world—and its fundamentals are as sound as they have been in three decades.

This turnaround occurred because of the hard work and ingenuity of the American people. Many of the new jobs are high-wage service sector jobs—reflecting the changing structure of the economy. The telecommunications, biotechnology, and software industries have led the high-tech revolution world-wide. Traditional industries, such as manufacturing and construction, have restructured and now use technology and workplace innovation to thrive and once again create jobs. For example, in 1994 and 1995, America was once again the world's largest automobile maker.

Our 1993 economic plan set the stage for this economic expansion and resurgence, by enacting historic deficit reduction while continuing to invest in technology and education. For over a decade, growing Federal budget deficits kept interest rates high and dampened investment and productivity growth. Now, our deficit is proportionately the lowest of any major economy.

Today, our challenge is to ensure that all Americans can become winners in economic change—that our people have the skills and the security to make the most of their own lives. The very explosion of technology and trade that creates such extraordinary opportunity also places new pressures on working people. Over the past two decades, middle-class earnings have stagnated, and our poorest families saw their incomes fall. These are long-run trends, and 3 years of sound economic policies cannot correct for a decade of neglect. Even so, we are beginning to make some progress: real median family income increased by 2.3 percent in 1994, and the poverty rate fell in 1994 for the first time in 5 years.

ADDRESSING OUR ECONOMIC CHALLENGES

I am firmly committed to addressing our economic challenges and enhancing economic security for all Americans. People who work hard need to know that they can and will have a chance to win in our new and changing economy. Our economic agenda seeks both to promote growth and to bring the fruits of that growth within reach of all Americans. Our overall strategy is straightforward:

—Balancing the budget. In the 12 years before I took office, the budget deficit skyrocketed and the national debt quadrupled. My Administration has already cut the budget deficit nearly in half. I am determined to finish the job of putting our fiscal house in order. I have proposed a plan that balances the budget in 7 years, without violating our fundamental values—without undercutting Medicare, Medicaid, education, or the environment and without raising taxes on working families. The plans put forth by my Administration and by the Republicans in the Congress contain enough spending cuts in common to balance the budget and still provide a modest tax cut. I am committed to giving the American people a balanced budget.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

—Preparing workers through education and training. In the new economy, education is the key to opportunity—and the education obtained as a child in school will no longer last a lifetime. My Administration has put in place the elements of a lifetime-learning system to enable Americans to attend schools with high standards; get help going to college, or from school into the workplace; and receive training and education throughout their careers. We expanded Head Start for preschoolers; enacted Goals 2000, establishing high standards for schools; created a new direct student loan program that makes it easier for young people to borrow and repay college loans; gave 50,000 young people the opportunity to earn college tuition through community service; and enacted the School-to-Work Opportunities Act. Now we must continue to give our people the skills they need, by enacting my proposals to make the first $10,000 of college tuition tax deductible; to give the top 5 percent of students in each high school a $1,000 merit scholarship; and to enact the GI Bill for Workers, which would replace the existing worker training system with a flexible voucher that workers could use at community colleges or other training facilities.

—Increasing economic security. We must give Americans the security they need to thrive in the new economy. We can do this through health insurance reforms that will give Americans a chance to buy insurance when they change jobs or when someone in their family is sick. We can do this by encouraging firms to provide more extensive pension coverage, as I have done through my proposals for pension simplification. In addition, we should make work pay by increasing the minimum wage and preserving the full Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC), which cuts taxes for hard-pressed working families to make sure that no parents who work full-time have to raise their children in poverty.

—Creating high-wage jobs through technology and exports. We must continue to encourage the growth of high-wage industries, which will create the high-wage jobs of the future. We have reformed the decades-old telecommunications laws, to help spur the digital revolution that will continue to transform the way we live. We must continue to encourage exports, since jobs supported by goods exports pay on average 13 percent more than other jobs. My Administration has concluded over 200 trade agreements, including the North American Free Trade Agreement and the Uruguay Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, seeking an open world marketplace and fair rules for exporters of American goods and services. As a result, merchandise exports have increased by 31 percent.

—A government that is smaller, works better, and costs less. A new economy demands a new kind of government. The era of big, centralized, one-size-fits-all government is over. But the answer is not the wholesale dismantling of government. Rather, we must strive to meet our problems using flexible, nonbureaucratic means—and working with businesses, religious groups, civic organizations, schools, and State and local governments. My Administration has reduced the size of government: as a percentage of civilian nonfarm employment, the Federal workforce is the smallest it has been since 1933, before the New Deal. We have conducted a top-to-bottom overhaul of Federal regulations, and are eliminating 16,000 pages of outdated or burdensome rules altogether. We have reformed environmental, workplace safety, and pharmaceutical regulation to cut red tape without hurting public protection. And we will continue to find new, market-based ways to protect the public.

THE NEED TO CONTINUE WITH WHAT WORKS

As The Annual Report of the Council of Economic Advisers makes clear, this is a moment of great possibility for our country. Ours is the healthiest of any major economy. No nation on earth is better positioned to reap the rewards of the new era. Our strategy of deficit reduction and investment in our people has begun to work. It would be a grave error to turn back.

Our Nation must reject the temptation to shrink from its responsibilities or to turn to narrow, shortsighted solutions for long-term problems. If we continue to invest for the long term, we will pass on to the next generation a Nation in which opportunity is even more plentiful than it is today.

WILLIAM J. CLINTON.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

SALUTE TO JUDGE A. LEON HIGGINBOTHAM, JR.

HON. KWEISI MFUME

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, February 16, 1996

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor and my privilege to rise today to pay a special tribute to a great American, Judge A. Leon Higginbotham, Jr. This man is an inspiration to those of us who are fortunate enough to be familiar with his works, and we as a nation are much better because of him and his works. Over the years I have had the great fortune to work with and get to know Judge Higginbotham, and from these experiences I have grown to consider him not only a friend, but a mentor.

Born in Trenton, NJ, Judge Higginbotham has become one of the most respected jurists of our day, not to mention a celebrated civil rights leader and an acclaimed professor at Harvard University. He serves today not only as an inspiration to all African-Americans, but also to all Americans who admire hard work and respect the freedoms and rights on which this Nation was founded.

Judge Higginbotham began his legal career in Pennsylvania, where he was appointed assistant district attorney in Philadelphia in the early 1950's. From there, he went on to serve as a member of the Pennsylvania Human Rights Commission and in 1959 he was elected president of the Philadelphia chapter of the NAACP. During this time he was also a partner in the law firm of Norris, Green, Harris & Higginbotham.

From 1960 to 1962, Judge Higginbotham was a special hearing officer for conscientious objectors at the Department of Justice, and from there he went on to become the first black commissioner of the Federal Trade Commission. From 1964 to 1977, he was a judge on the Federal District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. He left that job to sit on the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit from 1977 to his retirement in March 1993. For the last 4 years of his term, he served as only the third black judge to become chief judge of a circuit.

During this time Judge Higginbotham was also able to write and publish the highly acclaimed book, "In the Matter of Color: Race and the American Legal Process." Throughout his career, Judge Higginbotham's voice has been one of the clearest and most distinguished in the area of using the law to promote civil rights. He has also become, over the years, one of the most respected voices in the civil rights movement.

In Judge Higginbotham's case, retirement does not mean rest. He is currently a professor at Harvard and a practicing counsel to Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison, which has offices in both New York and Washington, DC. He has also remained active in civil rights organizations such as the NAACP, and I look forward to working with him in the years to come.

As even a modest perusal of his career will indicate, Judge Higginbotham's life can be summed up in one word: service. Judge Higginbotham's selfless dedication in applying his knowledge and talents to the betterment of all Americans should serve as an inspiration to all, regardless of their race, gender, or political beliefs. It is an honor to be able to salute him in these pages, and I look forward to many more years of his work on behalf of our Nation.

HELP OTHER PEOPLE EAT [HOPE] DAY

HON. MICHAEL P. FORBES

OF NEW YORK

Friday, February 16, 1996

Mr. FORBES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the New York Chiropractic Council and Long Island Cares for their commitment to end hunger on Long Island. In 1991, the New York Chiropractic Council created Help Other People Eat [HOPE] Day in an effort to fight the pervasive and increasing problem of hunger in the community.

The past 5 years, HOPE Day has raised over 200,000 pounds of food. This food was donated by chiropractic patients who received their adjustments/examinations from 400 HOPE Day chiropractic doctors for free in exchange for contributions of nonperishable food.

Today is HOPE Day 1996. This year, all of the food collected will be given to Long Island Cares for distribution to food agencies feeding hungry men, women, and children throughout New York. I congratulate the patients and the doctors who by their humanitarian efforts are helping the needy and the hungry.

Mr. Speaker, in time of reduced public benefits, an event such as HOPE Day 1996 deserves our respect and admiration. I thank all of those who are making HOPE Day 1996 a success.

SALUTE TO THE EPSILON OMEGA CHAPTER OF THE ALPHA KAPPA ALPHA SORORITY

HON. KWEISI MFUME

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, February 16, 1996

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay a special tribute to the Epsilon Omega Chapter of the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, which is celebrating its diamond jubilee this year.

The Epsilon Omega Chapter, which is based in Baltimore and was founded in 1921, began as the Sigma Chapter, the first graduate chapter in the North America Region of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc. Today, 300 members strong, the Epsilon Omega Chapter continues to provide distinguished service in developing programs and initiatives to address the needs of the Baltimore community.

Included in the group's goals are to increase health awareness among women and children; to advance educational and communications opportunities through various partnerships; to provide the support that is needed to bring about economic empowerment for African-American families, including minority-owned businesses and voter registration; and to provide a service to all who are in need.

Given these lofty goals and the hard work that these women have put into making them a reality, it is my high honor to salute the Epsilon Omega Chapter and all its members during their diamond jubilee year. May the next 75 years be just as prosperous for both the group and the community it serves.

SENATE—Tuesday, February 20, 1996

(Legislative day of Wednesday, February 7, 1996)

The Senate met at 11 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Dear God, thank You for revealing the quality of Your love which You seek to reproduce in our relationships. You have told us that:

Love suffers long and is kind; love does not envy; love does not parade itself, is not puffed up; does not behave rudely, does not seek its own, is not provoked, thinks no evil, does not rejoice in iniquity but rejoices in the truth; bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things. Love never fails.—I Corinthians 13:4–8a.

Father, may we experience this quality of love in our relationship with You so we will be able to love one another with the same giving and forgiving, indefatigable and inexhaustible love. Give us tough love for troublesome thick-skinned people and tender love for overly sensitive thin-skinned people. Today help us to be as kind, accepting, and patient to others as You have been to us. In the Lord's name. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The able acting majority leader, Senator LOTT, is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. LOTT. Thank you, Mr. President. Today there will be a period of morning business until the hour of 1 p.m., with the time equally divided between both sides of the aisle. No rollcall votes will occur during today's session; however, the Senate may consider any legislative items that can be cleared for action.

As a reminder to all Senators, the next rollcall vote will occur at 2:15 p.m., on Tuesday, February 27. That vote will be on the motion to invoke cloture on the D.C. appropriations conference report.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I understand that there are some Senators who will wish to speak on various subjects this morning. Is the Senator from Iowa prepared to speak at this time?

Mr. HARKIN. I would just respond, it will be about 60 seconds.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRIST). Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business.

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I would like to take a little time this morning to speak about an issue that has simply not received the kind of scrutiny and attention that it deserves. That is the renomination, or possible renomination of Alan Greenspan as Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. Arguably, perhaps, the second most powerful person in America today with regards to our economy and unemployment and interest rates and how fast our economy will grow or how slow it will grow is the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

Some have said the most important person is the President, but I guess to my way of thinking I think perhaps the Federal Reserve Board Chairman is the single most important and most powerful person in America today regarding decisions about what our economic life is going to be like in the months and few years ahead.

I say that not to denigrate the office of the President, but simply to point out that because of the downsizing of Government, because of budget cuts, because of shifting more power from the Federal Government to the States, because of the diminishing role of the Federal Government in the economic life of our country—I do not mean to get into a debate of whether that is good or bad. We have those debates all the time around here. The fact is it is happening. Thus, it devolves to the Federal Reserve Board in their deliberations about interest rates and discount rates and Federal fund rates to decide just what is going to happen in the economy. That has more of an impact on the economic life of America today than anything the President can do and arguably more important than anything we can do here in the Congress of the United States. Yet, this position of so much power and so much authority is kind of kept in the dark corners. We have not shown much sunlight on the Federal Reserve, or the chairmanship of the Federal Reserve and on who should be the Chairman.

Mr. Greenspan is finishing a 4-year term as Chairman. His time is up, I believe, in just a few days. It will be up to the President, under the law, to either reappoint Mr. Greenspan or to choose someone else to send to the Senate for confirmation as the new Chair of the Federal Reserve Board.

I make the argument today, as I did over a week ago, Mr. President, on the floor of the Senate, that Mr. Greenspan's time has come and gone, that his feet are firmly planted in the past and that his policies are no-growth policies. They are policies of high interest rates, no growth that is going to throttle our economy. Mr. Greenspan's policy has been—and I think a close scrutiny of his comments and his tenure both at the Federal Reserve and years ago on the Council of Economic Advisers will show—that here is an individual that has little concern for unemployment or what is happening to average Americans. Like a laser beam, his sight is only on inflation and the bond market and nothing else.

I believe, Mr. President, that has worked to the detriment of our country.

Mr. President, it was 50 years ago today that President Truman signed the Employment Act of 1946 into law—50 years ago this day. That is why I feel my words today are so important. That measure that signed into law 50 years ago today said that we should make it a matter of national policy to help create and maintain conditions to promote maximum employment, maximum production and purchasing power in our country. Note that it said "maximum employment," to promote it as a national policy.

Mr. President, there is a lot of rhetoric about the need to promote strong families, but when one talks about strong families, having a decent job is a crucial component of whether or not you have a strong family.

To further the goals of the Employment Act of 1946, Congress passed the Humphrey-Hawkins Act in 1978, which by law set out a requirement that the Federal Reserve have a goal to maximize full employment along with stable prices and moderate long-term interest rates. In other words, what we were saying is, you do not just take one; they all have to be kept in balance: full employment, stable prices, and moderate long-term interest rates.

Mr. President, we ought to be reaffirming those goals, but unfortunately some now say we should limit them instead. They want to prescribe low or no inflation as the sole criterion, as the sole cure for all of our economic ills. Well, you can have zero inflation and you can have it with very high unemployment. I do not think that is what our country wants.

My colleague from Florida, Senator MACK, has a bill to provide that the single goal of the Federal Reserve should be long-term price stability with only a secondary concern for the effects of employment. The bill says the single goal of the Federal Reserve should be long-term price stability. In other words, Senator MACK's bill basically takes that part of the Humphrey-Hawkins Act of 1978 that says that we should have a goal to maximize full employment and takes that out of appropriate consideration.

Imagine that, that we should not be concerned about unemployment. I tell you I find that mind-boggling, that someone would even suggest that we should not properly consider unemployment, we should only consider long-term price stability.

I might understand that a Senator or Congressman or more than one might prefer that option as a matter of policy, propose it at least for debate. I must admit I have not spoken personally to my friend Senator MACK—and he is my friend, the great Senator from Florida—I have not spoken with him personally about it. Maybe he only wants this open for debate. I do not know. But the disturbing part is not that Senator MACK introduced this bill, the disturbing point is that Alan Greenspan, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve, has endorsed that legislation.

Now, lest anyone think I am making this up, I have the hearing transcript where Mr. Greenspan basically, in open hearings, said he endorsed that legislation. Mr. President, here is the hearing record. This is a verbatim transcript from September 22, 1995, before the Senate Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee. I will just read the portion about Mr. Greenspan. It says:

> Your bill [referring to Senator MACK] which we fully support—

The rest does not make much sense. The most important, he said, "Your bill, which we fully support."

Mr. Greenspan has come out in support of taking out of consideration, in setting their policies, any concern for unemployment.

We will look now at the history. Between February 1994 and February 1995, 1 year, he raised interest rates by 3 full percentage points. Why? Well, in the fear that inflation might happen. But when asked, Mr. Greenspan himself said there was no inflation. Yet he raised interest rates 3 percentage points. I might point out, Mr. President, that Mr. Greenspan raised those interest rates five times before the election of 1994—five times he raised interest rates. The economy came to a grinding halt. Wages were depressed. People were not hiring. Business could not invest. The economy became more stagnant in 1994.

I might also point out there has been some talk lately that the Fed is loosening up and starting to reduce interest rates. I can imagine Mr. Greenspan wanting to get reappointed as Fed Chairman and wanting to look good so he brought interest rates down a little bit. In 1 year, February 1994 to February 1995, Mr. Greenspan raised interest rates 3 percentage points. From February 1995 to this February, they have only gone down three-quarters of 1 point—three-quarters of 1 point. I think that says it all.

Again, he raised interest rates, no inflation in sight. But because of Mr. Greenspan's narrow vision, he damaged our economy and limited the opportunity of millions of Americans to secure employment. Rather than viewing rising incomes of average Americans as a good thing, Alan Greenspan used it as a threat of future inflation.

Mr. President, inflation today is at its lowest point in 30 years, with only 1 year being an exception. Unemployment is now at 5.7 percent and has been below 6 percent for 17 months. I might point out that the law stipulates as a goal 4 percent unemployment, not 6 percent.

Mr. President, unemployment is high, just below 6 percent while Inflation is down. All is not well in our economy. Real incomes of average families have been falling. This past Sunday's Washington Post had a chart which showed the family incomes from 1979 to 1993. The top 20th of our Nation had their incomes rise by 29 percent, better than 2 percent per year for the top 5 percent of our country. However, those in the middle saw their standard of living drop by 2.6 percent. The top 5 percent had their incomes rise by 29 percent; the middle had a drop of 2.6 percent. Those families in the bottom 40 percent of our population saw their incomes actually fall during that period of time—not go up, but actually fall. For the bottom 20 percent, they fell by more than 1 percent a year; the top 5 percent in income in our country increased their incomes by better than 2 percent a year. The bottom 20 percent saw their incomes fall by 1 percent a year over that same period of time.

It has not always been that way. From 1966 to 1979 all groups saw rising incomes of more than 1 percent a year—all groups. Each one-fifth of the population saw real, genuine gains above 1 percent per year in sharing in America's growth. Not anymore. A few at the top are making more and more and the people in the middle are either staying stagnant or they are going down. Now, there are probably a lot of reasons for this change. One of the reasons we are seeing this lack of income growth across the board is a purposeful, deliberate, slow-growth policy pushed by the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. Always fearful of inflation, even when little threat exists, he has used his position to maximize interest rates relative to inflation, smothering any hint of substantial growth.

Mr. President, Mr. Greenspan cannot have it both ways. He cannot raise interest rates by 3 percent, say that there is some threat of inflation out there but he cannot put his finger on it, and then turn right around as he is raising those interest rates and suggest that the Consumer Price Index possibly overstates inflation by as much as 1 to 1.5 percent. How can he say that inflation is threatening and then turn around and say that the Consumer Price Index overstates it by 1 to 1.5 percent when inflation is only about 2.5 percent per year right now. Yet Mr. Greenspan has tried to have it both ways.

The President and the CBO are looking at the economy right now growing at about 2.5 percent over the long term. We had a big debate here last year, Mr. President, about what the economy is going to do in the future, what our budget ought to be and everything. If the economy can grow by an extra point, say 3.5 percent, the impact on Americans' standard of living over a period of time would be huge. How much? Trillions of dollars, trillions of dollars in additional income for America, thousands of dollars for the average family a year, if we had a progrowth policy at the Federal Reserve Board.

Even if we cannot get to 3.5 percent, if we could get it to 3 percent, we could wipe out our deficit, balance our budget, provide better wages for Americans, more job opportunities and probably reduce unemployment. But it is going to take a different person at the helm of the Federal Reserve to make this happen.

Now, I had in the past called upon the President to nominate a different person, someone with a more progrowth policy to head the Federal Reserve. I am pleased that the President has suggested we need a debate about the ability of the economy to perform at a higher growth rate over the long term. As I understand it, from reading the newspapers last week, the President wanted to appoint Felix Rohatyn to be Vice Chairman of the Federal Reserve. I do not know this, but I assume the President felt that with Mr. Rohatyn, who is a progrowth individual, there would be good debate at the Federal Reserve about the need for progrowth policies. But there was solid opposition from some on the other side of the aisle here in the Senate on the Banking Committee, and they said no way would they permit Felix Rohatyn to be approved and to go through for confirmation.

I find that very disturbing, Mr. President, that a person of the caliber of Felix Rohatyn is turned down before we even have one hearing, turned down by people on the other side of the aisle, I think, because they did not want this debate to take place. That is a shame. I think it is a great loss. If America is to achieve greatness, we have to allow the economy to grow faster.

Now, bond traders on Wall Street will always be pushing for a tighter monetary policy. I understand that. But the President and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board need to look more broadly at the needs of the whole economy and the welfare of American families who need an improved standard of living and not just the welfare of the bonds traders on Wall Street.

Mr. President, so I do not seem like a voice crying in the wilderness, I will read parts of an article by the editor in chief of U.S. News & World Report, Mortimer Zuckerman, February 12, 1996, entitled "Chairman Greenspan, Retired."

I want to read a couple parts of this, from the February 12, 1996, U.S. News & World Report:

> The Federal Reserve Board cut the federal funds rate last week, right? Wrong! Yes, nominal rates went down a minuscule one quarter of 1 percent.

Mr. Greenspan looked good saying he is cutting interest rates. Mr. Zuckerman is pointing out they really did not go down.

> But real rates, adjusted for inflation, actually have increased because the inflation rate has fallen faster over the past several months than has the Federal funds rate. Running scared from a phantom inflation, Alan Greenspan's "dear money" leadership has caused the Fed to exert a monetary choke hold on one of the weakest economic recoveries since World War II, at the cost of billions of dollars in lost output and tens of thousands of uncreated jobs.

Mr. Zuckerman has it right. He goes on:

> Just to keep real rates where they were, the federal funds rate would have had to have gone down by as much as a full percentage point. Instead, we have a fed funds rate that is still nearly 3 points above the most recent quarterly inflation rate, much higher than normal by historical standards. What's more, this is not only the wrong battle, it is the wrong target. Higher interest rates hurt manufacturing more than services, yet manufacturing inflation has not been a problem. In fact, we are experiencing the worst manufacturing slow down since 1991, and the indicators suggest even more weakness ahead. Just last month, for example, nonfarm employment fell by 201,000 jobs. No wonder more and more businesspeople, from the National Association of Manufacturers to Main Street and Wall Street, are so unhappy with Federal Reserve policy.

Mr. Zuckerman goes on, in another part of his article, to say this:

> The jobless recovery of the early 1990s has become the wageless expansion of the mid-1990s. We have no wage pressure on prices. We also have no import inflation because of a stronger dollar. At the consumer level, spending is very weak, reflecting stagnant personal income and real wages. Retail sales growth, which averaged 7.8 percent during 1994, declined to less than 5 percent in 1995. In the final quarter of the year, consumer spending was growing at an annual rate of 1 percent or so; adjusted for inflation, that's an actual decline. As a result, so-called demand-pull inflation—when hot consumer spending pulls up prices—is nonexistent. What we do have is a buildup in inventories, especially of durable goods, that is bound to slow the economy even more.

Last, Mr. Zuckerman closes his article by saying the following:

> We must do better. The fear of inflation has proved to be a chimera. Short rates have come down too little and too late to boost a weakening economy. The country does not have to endure the effects of the Fed's misjudgments in 1995 being extended into 1996.
> Alan Greenspan's term as Fed chairman would not survive a Democratic Congress. It ought not survive a Republican one either. Congressional Republicans should recognize that none of their programs to cut back government will survive a slow-growing economy that fails to provide Americans with good jobs and a sense of optimism about the future. The inflationary obsession of the Fed is not healthy; it is reactionary. It is cramping out todays and sacrificing our tomorrows.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of Mr. Zuckerman's article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From U.S. News & World Report, Feb. 12, 1996]

CHAIRMAN GREENSPAN, RETIRED

(By Mortimer B. Zuckerman)

The Federal Reserve Board cut the federal funds rate last week, right? Wrong! Yes, nominal rates went down a minuscule one quarter of 1 percent. But real rates, adjusted for inflation, actually have increased because the inflation rate has fallen faster over the past several months than has the federal funds rate. Running scared from a phantom inflation, Alan Greenspan's "dear money" leadership has caused the Fed to exert a monetary choke hold on one of the weakest economic recoveries since World War II, at the cost of billions of dollars in lost output and tens of thousands of uncreated jobs.

Just to keep real rates where they were, the federal funds rate would have had to have gone down by as much as a full percentage point. Instead, we have a fed funds rate that is still nearly 3 points above the most recent quarterly inflation rate, much higher than normal by historical standards. What's more, this is not only the wrong battle, it is the wrong target. Higher interest rates hurt manufacturing more than services, yet manufacturing inflation has not been a problem. In fact, we are experiencing the worst manufacturing slowdown since 1991, and the indicators suggest even more weakness ahead. Just last month, for example, nonfarm employment fell by 201,000 jobs. No wonder more and more businesspeople, from the National Association of Manufacturers to Main Street and Wall Street, are so unhappy with Federal Reserve policy.

The traditional central bank role is to take away the booze when the party gets too raucous. But what we have today is a glass of water served to a gathering of teetotalers. There is no inflation to fight. The nominal rate is about 2 percent for the last quarter of 1995, and even that is overstated by as much as 1 percentage point. In short, inflation is declining instead of rising, as it usually does at this point in a business cycle—a clear tipoff that the economy is not in good shape. Even the Fed's key indicator of inflation—the time it takes for vendors to make deliveries of capital goods—is stable, in contrast to the stretching out that occurred at the end of 1994. Unit labor costs (wages and benefits adjusted for productivity), which make up two thirds of a product's price, are no higher today than they were a year ago—the first time we have had zero growth in this index for 30 years.

The jobless recovery of the early 1990s has become the wageless expansion of the mid-1990s. We have no wage pressure on prices. We also have no import inflation because of a stronger dollar. At the consumer level, spending is very weak, reflecting stagnant personal income and real wages. Retail sales growth, which averaged 7.8 percent during 1994, declined to less than 5 percent in 1995. In the final quarter of the year, consumer spending was growing at an annual rate of 1 percent or so; adjusted for inflation, that's an actual decline. As a result, so-called demand-pull inflation—when hot consumer spending pulls up prices—is nonexistent. What we do have is a buildup in inventories, especially of durable goods, that is bound to slow economy even more.

Meanwhile, the deficit continues to decline and in 1996 and 1997 will create more fiscal drag because no agreement has been reached on the budget, thereby squeezing discretionary government spending even more harshly. Exports are constrained by the weakness of our biggest trading partners.

Only corporate investment is booming, boosting supply more rapidly than consumption—another clear antidote to any inflationary pressure. But it isn't enough: Merrill Lynch is justified in lowering its forecast for U.S. economic growth to less than 2 percent for 1996, the first half being particularly weak.

We must do better. The fear of inflation has proved to be a chimera. Short rates have come down too little and too late to boost a weakening economy. The country does not have to endure the effects of the Fed's misjudgments in 1995 being extended into 1996.

Alan Greenspan's term as Fed chairman would not survive a Democratic Congress. It ought not survive a Republican one either. Congressional Republicans should recognize that none of their programs to cut back government will survive a slow-growing economy that fails to provide Americans with good jobs and a sense of optimism about the future. The inflationary obsession of the Fed is not healthy; it is reactionary. It is cramping our todays and sacrificing our tomorrows.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, as Mr. Zuckerman has said, we need to stop chasing the ghost of inflation. We need to appoint a respected individual who will take a balanced view about the needs of our economy and not place a choke hold on our Nation each time it strives to move forward with any real speed. Since Alan Greenspan became Chairman of the Federal Reserve, the economy has grown by a dismal 2.1 percent, compared to 3.4 percent from 1959 through 1987.

Again, the cost is in the mega-billions of dollars, that it has cost our economy because of Mr. Greenspan's position. Many economists are now looking at growth for 1996 at around 2 percent with the current Federal Reserve policies.

Mr. President, there is another meeting of the Open Market Committee on March 26. In reading the popular press, there is some indication that Mr. Greenspan has kind of leaked out that there could possibly be another cut in interest rates. What, a quarter of a percent? As Mr. Zuckerman says, the last quarter of a percent actually was not a cut at all. It needed to go down by a full percentage point. So, even if Mr. Greenspan reduces interest rates by another quarter of a percent, which he is probably going to do, it does not mean that much.

One last thing. We should also be concerned about Mr. Greenspan's seeming inability to see upcoming recessions, even when he is right in the middle of them. Again, what does the record show?

Alan Greenspan was the Chairman of Gerald Ford's Council of Economic Advisers. I understand that he is the author of the famous WIN button. Those of us who started our political careers about that time remember the button: WIN, Whip Inflation Now. Everybody wore those. President Ford heeded Alan Greenspan's advice as he derailed job-creation measures and our Nation plunged into a recession.

We need to focus on Mr. Greenspan's time as Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers in 1974 and 1975. It was clearly a time of high inflation, mainly caused by the first oil shock. But it was also a time of sharp recession.

As the Nation was moving into recession, Alan Greenspan was, reportedly favorable to tax increases as a means to fight inflation. He urged President Ford to kill legislation designed to create jobs and stimulate the economy.

A few months later, when the recession was fully in bloom, he changed his mind and wanted tax cuts. But that was too late for many families, as unemployment exploded from 5.4 percent in the summer of 1974, passing 8 percent by June of 1975. I am not saying Alan Greenspan caused the recession of 1974. What I am saying is he was so focused on inflation he could not see it coming, and he proposed just the opposite remedy, and that is what President Ford followed.

More recently, in 1990 and 1991, as Chairman of the Federal Reserve, Alan Greenspan was very slow in reducing interest rates. Last month the Wall Street Journal reported on the just-released Fed transcripts of 1990. Mr. President, the transcripts of Federal Reserve Board meetings are kept secret for 5 years, and then they are released. We just got the transcripts of the meetings back in 1990. On January 24, 1996, the Wall Street Journal had an article by David Wessel, talking about those transcripts. Here is what the article said.

> "There are forecasts of thunderstorms and everyone is saying, 'Well, the thunder has occurred and the lightning has occurred and it's raining.' But nobody has stuck his hand out the window," Mr. Greenspan told fellow Fed policymakers on Oct. 2, 1990.
> "And at the moment," he added, "it isn't raining. . . . The economy has not yet slipped into a recession."
> The recession, the official arbiters at the National Bureau of Economic Research determined much later, began in July 1990, a month before Iraq invaded Kuwait.

And yet, by October, Mr. Greenspan still could not see that we were in a recession.

There is more in the Wall Street Journal article I would like to read, Mr. President, but I see others on the floor who would like to speak. It talks about the meetings that were held in 1990 and 1991, when we were clearly in a recession. Yet, Mr. Greenspan could not see it.

"By December 18," almost 6 months after the recession started, "Mr. Greenspan finally had enough data to conclude that a recession—then nearly 5 months old—had begun." Again, quotes from his minutes.

> "We have severe recessionary pressures," he told the Open Market Committee," but recessions always end.
> "At some point," he said confidently, "we're going to come out of this."
> He was right, the recession officially ended in March 1991.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent this entire January 24, 1996 Wall Street Journal article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ECONOMY—EVEN THE FED'S GREENSPAN IS FALLIBLE WHEN TRYING TO PREDICT A RECESSION

(By David Wessel)

WASHINGTON.—Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, often caricatured as a dour pessimist, didn't see the gathering storm clouds when he peered into his crystal ball in 1990.

Newly released transcripts of closed-door deliberations at the Fed show that Mr. Greenspan didn't see a recession unfolding until very late that year.

"There are forecasts of thunderstorms and everyone is saying, 'Well, the thunder has occurred and the lightning has occurred and it's raining.' But nobody has stuck his hand out the window," Mr. Greenspan told fellow Fed policymakers on Oct. 2, 1990.

"And at the moment," he added, "it isn't raining. . . . The economy has not yet slipped into a recession."

The recession, the official arbiters at the National Bureau of Economic Research determined much later, began in July 1990, a month before Iraq invaded Kuwait.

The Fed cut short-term interest rates one-quarter percentage point in July 1990, explaining the move as a one-time attempt to offset the effects of a credit crunch. But despite concerns expressed inside and outside the Fed about the weakening economy, Mr. Greenspan resisted cutting rates again until Oct. 29, 1990, after Congress and President Bush agreed on a deficit-reduction accord. That quarter-point rate cut was followed by three more of the same size before the end of the year.

At the time, the Fed was criticized by some—and by many in the months that followed—for responding too sluggishly to a deteriorating economy. But in public comments, Mr. Greenspan has been reluctant to confess he erred, given the information available to him at the time.

The transcripts, released yesterday after the customary delay of five years, show that the Fed was contemplating interest rate increases for much of the earlier part of 1990.

By summer, signs that a credit crunch was hurting the economy proliferated. For that reason, Mr. Greenspan persuaded the Fed to cut interest rates by ¼-percentage point. Still, in early July, he told Fed officials that the reluctance of businesses and consumers to borrow and bankers to lend, "which I believe historically would almost always have dumped us into a recession, failed to do so. . . ."

Although other Fed officials were worried about the economy, they didn't anticipate a recession either. "It's clear to me the economy is weaker than as projected," Fed governor David Mullins said in July, "but there are no compelling signs that we are headed for a recession."

At a pivotal meeting on Aug. 21, however, there was growing sentiment for cutting interest rates to stimulate the economy, but also concern about the inflationary pressures created by rising oil prices. With Mr. Greenspan's blessing, the Fed agreed that interest rate cuts were likely soon.

But the chairman, backed by Fed staff economists, continued to resist the notion that the U.S. had entered a recession. "I think there are several things we can stipulate with some degree of certainty," he told the Fed at the Aug. 21 meeting, "namely that those who argue that we are already in a recession . . . are reasonably certain to be wrong."

They weren't wrong, of course. But Mr. Greenspan argued that there was little the Fed could do to help the economy because everything hinged on oil prices. "I would suspect at this point," the chairman said, "that the Pentagon has more policymaking clout than we do because it's fairly obvious looking around the world that if oil [prices] go up and oil [production] comes down, that will have profound effects. . . ."

Although Mr. Greenspan had the leeway to cut rates sooner, he waited until Congress approved a deficit-reduction accord in October. Even then, Fed economists remained optimistic about the economy. "Incoming data . . . have not provided clear-cut indications that we are headed toward even a mild recession," chief Fed forecaster Michael Prell told officials in October, three months after the recession had begun.

By mid-November, the Fed staff was losing confidence in its sunny forecast. "The signals of a downturn still are limited," Mr. Prell told officials, "but there certainly are some now." Mr. Mullins, then Fed vice chairman, no longer was mincing words. "I think we have a recessionary psychology in full bloom," he declared.

But even as Mr. Greenspan told Fed officials in a telephone conference call on Dec. 7 that he had just cut short-term interest rates to help stimulate the weak economy, he sounded skeptical that it had slid into recession. New factory orders still weren't showing the typical recession pattern, he argued, though he continued to worry about damage from the credit crunch.

By Dec. 18, Mr. Greenspan finally had enough data to conclude that a recession—then nearly five months old—had begun. "We have severe recessionary pressures," he told the Open Market committee. "But recessions always end."

"At some point," he said confidently, "we're going to come out of this."

He was right. The recession officially ended in March 1991.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, we face another period of high risk for the economy to plunge into recession. Do we want Alan Greenspan, whose main focus has always been on inflation, to be in charge of Federal Reserve policy? I think the answer is clearly no.

There are two vacancies on the Federal Reserve Board. As I said earlier, the President wanted to appoint Felix Rohaytn to one of those positions, making him Vice Chairman of the Board. Mr. Rohaytn is a man with an extremely distinguished career. Most notably, he is credited as the guiding hand that led New York City from the edge of default and economic ruin back to health.

I remember that debate. I was in the House of Representatives at the time. I represented a very rural district from Iowa. I listened to Mr. Rohaytn at the time as he made his case for the New York City bailout, as it was called, and for the Federal Government and for the Congress to assist in that process. It was not in my best interests, representing a rural district, to vote for New York City. In fact, I took some pretty bad political hits for doing so. But I believed it was the right thing to do.

Congress passed it. New York City was able to pay its bills and avoid default. It solved many of its problems with a growth policy initiated by Felix Rohaytn.

He believes in growth. I find it hard to believe that anyone would want to oppose his nomination. This is particularly true when the discussion was to have him as a counterweight to Alan Greenspan's orientation to focus on inflation; to have, as I understand it, with the present one, to have a debate about the policy of the Fed. But opposition from some on the other side of the aisle has, frankly, killed the nomination of Felix Rohaytn.

President Clinton said last Friday that we need a debate within the Federal Reserve to see if the economy can grow faster than the conventional wisdom of a 2.5 percent average, without triggering inflation. We need that debate. That debate will not take place under Alan Greenspan.

The question of taking the Federal Reserve's heavy hand of high interest rates off the throttle of our economy is crucial to the long-term growth of our Nation. But to not even allow an appointment to move forward, of Mr. Rohaytn, so we can engender that debate, start that debate, is absolutely wrong.

As I said in my remarks last week, Mr. Greenspan's feet are firmly planted in the past. Mr. Greenspan's focus is not on average, hard-working Americans. It is not on our families in the middle-income brackets of America. It is not on the manufacturing sector that has to invest and create the kind of climate that will employ people and let wages go up. No, Mr. Greenspan's focus is not there. His focus is some phantom inflation out there, and as long as inflation can be kept at the lowest possible position all is right with the world in Mr. Greenspan's view. But as we have said in the past, Mr. President, it is not just inflation that we have to be concerned about. We have to be concerned about unemployment and economic growth. And Mr. Greenspan is not concerned about either one of those.

So, again, Mr. President, I call upon President Clinton to pick someone else to be Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, someone who has a concept of growth and what growth will mean to our economy and the incomes of average Americans. We can have a debate this year. I think we will have it. I hope it will happen in the Presidential races. I hope that we have it in all of the Senate and House races which are up this year—about what the proper rate of growth ought to be in this country.

Should it be 2.5 percent? Should it be 2 percent, or can we reasonably expect to grow at a faster rate? I happen to come down on the side of progrowth. I believe our economy has all of the underpinnings to grow at least 3.5 percent a year. I might even make the argument that it can grow faster than that without triggering inflation.

We are truly in a global economy. Markets abroad can send in goods to this country, and even services, to keep any kind of inflation under control and under check. Rising wages will not push up inflation because the rising wages will just barely keep up with the rising productivity of American workers. Our American workers are more productive than ever before. Yet, their wages are not keeping up with their productivity. If we let wages go up a little bit, it will kind of keep up with productivity. That means people have a little bit more money to go out and buy some goods. That means that our economy will grow.

We are not having that debate. We can have that debate. As I said, I hope we do have it in the Presidential races, and I hope we have it in all of our races this year. But if we have an individual in charge of the Federal Reserve who believes that growth cannot be above 2 or 2.5 percent, you can have all of the debates in the world, because the Federal Reserve is independent and they are under Mr. Greenspan's control to throttle down on that economy. We will see a no-growth policy from the Federal Reserve regardless of what we might say in our individual campaigns, or what we in the Senate or the House might want to do in the future.

So, Mr. President, I think it is unfortunate that the debate about the policies of the Fed and about the leadership of the Fed is not undergoing more scrutiny than it is in our news media today. We are all wrapped up, I know, in the New Hampshire primary, and before that in the Iowa caucuses—who is ahead? Who is behind? —and a flat tax, and all the other stuff. Yet, the single most powerful position in America that has to do with our economy, what our future is going to be like, what our kids' future is going to be like, what our incomes and wages and job possibilities are going to be like, no one is talking about it.

Thank God that Mortimer Zuckerman at least wrote an editorial in U.S. News & World Report. You see little about it in the Washington Post and newspapers around the country. Everyone just assumes that Mr. Greenspan is going to be renominated and take the position. I do not make that assumption. And if Mr. Greenspan is in fact renominated by the President, he will come here for hearings.

I intend, if that is the case in the coming weeks, to delve more into Mr. Greenspan's background and his philosophy and what he has done in the past, and why his past actions should warrant a no vote on the Senate floor for his reconfirmation, if in fact the President renominates him.

So I say—not a warning, simply as a statement of fact—that this is one Senator who is not going to allow Mr. Greenspan, if he is renominated, to sail through here without any debate. I intend to make it an issue, and I intend to talk about it and talk about his stewardship and to talk about his no-growth policies, because I think it is that important for our economy and for our country.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. LEVIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

EDUCATION

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, on January 26 the Congress passed the so-called continuing resolution which temporarily funds the Government through March 15. This was greeted by headlines across the country. The headline that touches this ran in the Washington Post saying that the Congress had approved a funding extension averting the third shutdown of Government.

The focus of the press and media was understandable because, in fact, that continuing resolution did allow us to continue the Government through March 15. But what was not really known to the public and did not become clear until later was that embedded in that continuing resolution was a massive cut in education, hitting programs which I think most of us on a bipartisan basis in this Chamber know work.

There was an effort made to restore those education funds in the continuing resolution. That effort received more than a majority of the votes: 51 of us voted to restore those education funds and 40 of us voted against. But, because of the technicalities of the Budget Act, there had to be a waiver which required 60 votes. So a majority did not rule on that effort to restore these education funds.

When I traveled around my home State of Michigan in these last few weeks, I must tell you I find amazement when the public realizes, I think for the first time, that in that resolution that was passed to keep the Government going until March 15 were historic cuts in education. This was not about cuts in the growth. That is not the issue in this one.

Sometimes there is a debate around here as to whether you are slowing growth or cutting the program. On these education cuts, these are dollar reductions from current spending levels of a historic proportion in programs that most of us I think believe in. I am going to get into some of those cuts in a moment.

But what was truly ironic is that the same day that we were cutting funding for math and science teaching by $1 billion, that we were cutting Pell grants, and School to Work grants, which is a newer form of vocational education, that we were cutting college loan programs and a whole host of other programs including Head Start, the same day that we were cutting education by $3 billion on an annualized basis, we passed a new version of a conference report on defense spending which increased it by $7 billion above the Pentagon request mainly for planes and ships that the Pentagon did not ask for.

So, on the one hand, within hours of each other we cut programs for education, which are critically important, by over $3 billion on an annualized basis and increased defense spending by $7 billion for items that the Pentagon did not request. That is a pretty dramatic juxtaposition, it seems to me, and terrible priorities.

When my people back home found out about this in a whole host of meetings which I held around Michigan, they are truly against what happened and are pleading with me when we come back to try to reverse these cuts, because this is not a done deal. These cuts are cuts in programs through March 15, which, if annualized, lead to a $3 billion cut. They do not have to, and they should not.

When this resolution was presented to us, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator HATFIELD, said the following. He said:

> I cannot for the life of me understand the action of the House [of Representatives]. I believe it is wrong. It puts the gun to our heads.

He went on to say:

> We have found ourselves in an extraordinary parliamentary situation that requires unanimous consent to take further action. Unable to secure that consent, we have been unable to once again uphold a Senate position or even to have the Senate consider a compromise.

Senator HATFIELD pointed out correctly that the gun is to the Senate's head, which resulted in the passage of a resolution which will have a dramatic negative impact on the funding of education in America. We have to remove that gun from our head before March 15.

We should be here during these few weeks negotiating these issues so that gun is not again put at our head, so that it is removed, and so that we can try to repair the damage that resulted the last time it was placed to our head.

The title I program, which provides crucial help in reading, math, and writing to over a million American children, which I think has the support of the education community across the land, that title I program was cut by $1 billion. That was a 17-percent cut in title I. By the way, one of the ships which was added which was not requested by the Pentagon was slightly less than $1 billion.

The innovative School-to-Work Program was cut by 22 percent. This is a program which helps young people in high school make the transition from school to work. The new part of this program, which was missing in the old vocational education days, is that the business community is working with the high schools to design programs which will prepare young people for real jobs.

I have been to these programs all over the State of Michigan. I have been in a number of places where business people at a meeting with students are telling the students, "When you complete this program, when you achieve these skills that you are going to get in these school-to-work programs in your high school, we guarantee you a job."

I never remember anything like that happening when I was in high school in the vocational education days of yore, when the business community was deeply involved in a partnership with the schools and was so confident that the skills which would be provided to students would be useful to them that they would sit in a room—in one case with 50 students—and tell every one of them, "If you graduate from this program, you've got a job with our company." That program, that innovative School-to-Work Program, was cut by 22 percent.

These are not 2- and 3-percent cuts across the board to help us reduce the deficit. These are massive reductions in programs that are working. It is a 22-percent reduction in School-to-Work money.

Head Start was cut. In higher education, Pell grants were cut by 7 percent. The Perkins Loan Program was cut by 25 percent. State student incentive grants were cut by 25 percent. Again, I emphasize these are not just slowdowns in the rate of growth; these are actual reductions from the level of funding in the last year.

I know there are some candidates out there who have recently discovered that middle-income Americans are in the middle of a long-term economic squeeze. As the Senator from Iowa said, middle America's income has dropped over the last 20 years in real terms after inflation and after taxes. There is a real squeeze that has been going on for a long time.

The fact that some folks out there are discovering it for the first time is not the point of my remarks this morning. What is the point of my remarks this morning is that I am glad they have finally discovered it and that one of the ways to address it is through education.

We know that there is a clear relationship between the educational achievement of people in general and their incomes. As a matter of fact, the relationship between education, training, and income is clearer than ever and more dramatic than ever. The gap between a lack of education and income is greater than ever. In the last 15 years, the difference in pay between college-educated workers and those with a high school education has just about doubled. There has always been a difference, but that difference in just a 15-year period has about doubled.

So we know what education can do. We know what training can do in terms of income. We know we face an income squeeze. So what is the response of this Congress? A significant reduction in education programs that are working.

Head Start is working. This is not a program that has failed. This is a program that has produced demonstrable achievement across the country. The surveys of Head Start programs show that people who graduate, these 3- and 4-year-olds who are in Head Start, 10 years later and 20 years later do much better in their careers. In just about every other measurable way, the 3- and 4-year-olds who had Head Start 10 years ago and 20 years ago or 15 years ago are doing much better than those who did not. Yet only about half of our children who are 3 and 4 years old who are eligible for Head Start get Head Start because of the lack of funding.

So what did this bill do? It cut Head Start, a program which I think, if not universally applauded, is about as supported a program as any I know of. This is not a case where we are cutting programs which are not working. This is a case where we are cutting programs which are working and which are essential to this country.

I know some of these cuts were used as threats, particularly by some people over in the House who are determined to get their way on bigger budget issues. These Members of the House who take the position, "It is my way or else; it is my way or else the Government is coming to a halt; it is my way or else we are going to have major cuts in education; it is my way or else our debts are not going to be paid, we're not going to pay interest on the national debt or on the obligations of this country," those "my way or else" Members of the House got their way in this continuing resolution. They should not have.

We should not let them have their way again. I think there are enough people in the Senate on a bipartisan basis who object deeply to these cuts in education that, if we will pull together, we can let the House know, particularly those 60 or so Republicans in the House who have taken this position that unless they get their way the Government is to shut down, it has to be their way or else the full faith and credit of the United States is going to be damaged—they had their way in this continuing resolution.

These cuts are a reflection of a tactic, an extreme tactic, an irresponsible tactic of closing the Government down unless they get their way. That tactic had, I think, negative and damaging results in this continuing resolution which we tried to repair. Fifty-one of us voted to repair it. Then ultimately the resolution passed because, I think, as the chairman of the Appropriations Committee felt, there was no choice. The gun was at our head.

We have to take that gun away, not just on keeping the Government going and restoring these education cuts, but also on the full faith and credit of the United States. This is a pattern which should not be repeated.

I hope that the Senate, on a bipartisan basis, sends a strong signal to Speaker GINGRICH that we are not going to tolerate this again and that we are going to seek to restore the cuts which have so damaged education programs and so left educators in a quandary as to what the funding is going to be for next fall. They do not know. There is no way for them to plan either in the K through 12 level or in college.

They do not know what the funding is going to be for college loans, for Pell grants, for student incentive grants. They do not know what the funding is going to be for Head Start for 3- and 4-year-olds. They do not know what the School-to-Work funding is going to be. And here we are approaching spring now, when the planning is done, with all of this up in the air.

So, Mr. President, I hope we will take a strong stand to restore these cuts, to repair the damage and to remove the gun which has been placed at the head of the economy and at Members of the Senate.

I thank the Chair and I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COATS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO AMBASSADOR RAY OF INDIA

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I want to take a moment today to pay tribute and bid a fond farewell to a very distinguished statesman, a good friend to the United States and a dear friend of mine—Siddhartha Shankar Ray, India's Ambassador to the United States. Ambassador Ray has decided to return to his home country, and more specifically to West Bengal, to run for a seat in the Indian Parliament. I wish him great success in this and in his future endeavors.

As all my colleagues know Ambassador Ray has worked tirelessly during his more than 3 years here to strengthen Indo-United States relations. It is safe to say he has performed his duties with great distinction and even greater success. His service to his country here in Washington came at a vital period in Indo-United States relations. With the end of the cold war, past barriers to better relations with India have gone with it, and vast new opportunities have emerged. We have seen increased investment, trade, and cultural exchanges between our two countries. We also are laying the groundwork for discussions on security issues. Ambassador Ray has played a vital role in this exciting new era. I am certain he will continue to do so.

Ambassador Ray is an industrious and articulate diplomat, and a tenacious advocate for his country. The secret of Ambassador Ray's success is simple. As Sister Mary Lauretta once stated: "To be successful, the first thing to do is fall in love with your work." Ambassador Ray loves India. He believes in India's future. His love of country and faith in his fellow citizens were evident throughout his service here.

I had the opportunity to spend time with Ambassador Ray and his wife, Maya, last week at his farewell dinner. Both have been positive forces for their country. Now, they intend to continue their already distinguished service at home. No matter what path Ambassador Ray may take, I am certain that all of India will stand to benefit.

Ambassador and Mrs. Ray will be sorely missed by all of us in the Washington community. But it is safe to say we can always look to Ambassador Ray to be an essential element in our strengthening ties with India. Again, I wish my friend Ambassador Ray and his family the very best.

HONORING THE MOORE'S FOR CELEBRATING THEIR 50TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, these are trying times for the family in America. Unfortunately, too many broken homes have become part of our national culture. It is tragic that nearly half of all couples married today will see their union dissolve into divorce. The effects of divorce on families and particularly the children of broken families are devastating. In such an era, I believe it is both instructive and important to honor those who have taken the commitment of "til death us do part" seriously and have successfully demonstrated the timeless principles of love, honor, and fidelity, to build a strong family. These qualities make our country strong.

For these important reasons, I rise today to honor Mr. and Mrs. Albert Moore who on February 24 celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary. My wife, Janet, and I look forward to the day we can celebrate a similar milestone. The Moore's commitment to the principles and values of their marriage deserves to be saluted and recognized. I wish them and their family all the best as they celebrate this substantial marker on their journey together.

REPORT CONCERNING THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR DEMOCRACY FOR FISCAL YEAR 1995—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 122

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions of section 504(h) of Public Law 98–164, as amended (22 U.S.C. 4413(i)), I transmit herewith the 12th Annual Report of the National Endowment for Democracy, which covers fiscal year 1995.

As the report demonstrates, the National Endowment for Democracy remains at the forefront of our efforts to expand and consolidate democratic gains around the globe. The strong bipartisan support the Endowment continues to receive reflects our Nation's steadfast commitment to the promotion of democracy.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE RECEIVED DURING RECESS

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. BREAUX:

S. 1569. A bill to provide for one additional Federal judge for the middle district of Louisiana; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LOUISIANA FEDERAL JUDICIAL LEGISLATION

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I rise today to offer legislation that will correct a serious inequity in Louisiana's judicial districts.

My legislation adds an additional judge to the middle district of Louisiana, based in Baton Rouge. U.S. District Judges John Parker and Frank Polozola, the two Baton Rouge judges, each have almost 2,000 cases pending. The national average for Federal judges is 400 cases pending. Case filings in the middle district have totaled more than four times the national average. The Baton Rouge district also ranks first among the Nation's 97 Federal court districts in total filings, civil filings, weighted filings, and in the percent change in total filings last year.

Louisiana's middle district is composed of nine parishes. The State capital and many of the State's adult and juvenile prisons and forensic facilities are located in this district. The court is regularly required to hear most of the litigation challenging the constitutionality of State laws and the actions of State agencies and officials. The district now has several reapportionment and election cases pending on the docket which generally require the immediate attention of the court. Additionally, because numerous chemical, oil, and industrial plants and hazardous waste sites are located in the middle district, the court has in the past and will continue to handle complex mass tort cases. One environmental case alone, involving over 7,000 plaintiffs and numerous defendants, is being handled by a judge from another district because both of the middle district's judges were recused.

Since 1984, the middle district has sought an additional judge because of its concern that its caseload would continue to rise despite the fact that its judges' termination rate exceeded the national average and ranked among the highest in numerical standing within the United States and the fifth circuit. Both the judicial conference and the Judicial Council of the Fifth Circuit have approved the middle district's request for an additional judgeship after each biennial survey from 1984 through 1994.

Mr. President, I know that my colleagues will agree with me that the clear solution to this obvious inequity is to assign an additional judge to Louisiana's middle district. I look forward to the Senate's resolution of this important matter.

By Mr. McCAIN:

S. 1570. A bill to amend the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 and the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide that the restriction on the assignment or alienation of pension plan benefits shall not apply to court-ordered criminal fines or victim restitution; to the Committee on Finance.

RESTITUTION FOR VICTIMS OF CRIME LEGISLATION

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation that would provide crime victims a real opportunity to receive their due restitution from convicted criminals. This bill would enhance collections on criminal restitution orders for crime victims by allowing the Federal Government to garnish the pension plan benefits of convicted felons.

Currently, courts may not garnish pension benefits provided under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act [ERISA] to satisfy criminal restitution orders. As a result, criminals can avoid paying fines or making restitution to their victims when their only income consists of pension money. In fact, in most cases, criminals have pension money as their only source of income, and therefore, they never pay off their debt.

The amount of criminal debt had ballooned to nearly $4.5 billion by the close of fiscal year 1994. The largest amount of that criminal debt is owed by defendants who have been ordered to pay restitution directly to crime victims. Over $3 billion is outstanding on these criminal restitution orders.

We must not sit idly by and watch these criminal debt figures continue to mount year after year. Our Nation's crime victims deserve restitution. It is unfair that criminals are allowed to shield their pension funds from being garnished when those funds are necessary to provide much needed restitution to their victims.

Mr. President, the National Victim Center supports this legislation and best expressed the principle behind this bill by recognizing that crime shouldn't pay, but criminals should.

I would urge my colleagues to support this legislation. It will increase criminal fine collection by allowing a new source of the offender's income to be collected, and will help ensure that victims are properly and fairly compensated in a timely manner.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of a letter from David Beatty, acting executive director of the National Victim Center, be printed.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL VICTIM CENTER,
Arlington, VA, February 16, 1996.

HON. SENATOR MCCAIN,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: Thank you for the opportunity to express our views concerning your proposed amendment to the Employee Retirement Security Act of 1974 and the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

Offender accountability has long been a corner stone of the American criminal justice system. Such Accountability includes not only the offender's payment of his debt to society but also financial responsibility to the innocent victims who suffer the severe economic consequences of the crimes inflicted upon them.

Requiring offenders to pay restitution to their victims for the harm that resulted from their criminal acts serves the ends of justice in several ways. First and foremost, restitution reimburses crime victims for the goods and services that are essential to their physical, emotional and financial recovery.

It also provides the kind of direct accountability to victims that helps satisfy their sense of fairness and their desire for justice. By engendering a greater sense of personal responsibility, restitution also serves the broader criminal justice objectives of deterrence and even rehabilitation.

Studies have shown that there is a clear correlation between restitution and lower recidivism rates. Offenders who are held financially responsible to their victims develop a greater appreciation for the hardship and human suffering cause by their thoughtless criminal acts. Offenders who gain a moral sense of responsibility by making payment directly to their victims are less likely to commit such crimes in the future.

Yet, none of the advantages restitution have to offer will be fulfilled unless offenders are actually made to pay. Not surprisingly, offenders' failures to pay have all but defeated the principle and purpose of restitution as a practical matter. Given the perplexity involved in locating and seizing the economic resource of offenders, it is extremely difficult to force offenders to pay the restitution they owe.

Senator McCain has introduced an amendment that helps solve the restitution payment problem—at least in those cases where the government is already in possession of assets belonging to the offender. The amendment would allow government officials to divert federal pension benefits and tax refunds owed to the offender directly to the victims to whom the offender owes restitution. This simple and sensible solution allows government officials to avoid the time and expense of searching out and seizing those assets already in the hands of offenders. In short, this approach is the perfect incarnation of the old adage that, "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush".

Currently, the federal government is paying convicted offenders who are refusing to pay their victims. The McCain Amendment will effectively put an end to this unconscionable practice.

The McCain Amendment would apply these same interception mechanisms to the collection of federal fines. Since federal fines are used to fund victim compensation and assistance programs nationwide, crime victims have a great stake in seeing that every effort is made to fully collect such fines. Again, this amendment would ensure that monies owed offenders by the federal government would be used to serve victims rather than enrich their perpetrators. In other words, "Crime shouldn't pay, but criminals should".

It is for these reasons that the Board of Directors and staff of the National Victim Center fully support Senator McCain's efforts to divert government payments owed to offenders to benefit their victims.

Sincerely,

DAVID BEATTY,
Acting Executive Director.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

THE LAND DISPOSAL PROGRAM FLEXIBILITY ACT OF 1995

CHAFEE (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3464

Mr. LOTT (for Mr. CHAFEE, for himself, Mr. SMITH, Mr. DOLE, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. NICKLES, and Mr. KEMPTHORNE) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 2036) to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act to make certain adjustments in the land disposal program to provide needed flexibility, and for other purposes, supra; as follows:

On page 2, beginning line 4, strike all through page 4, line 15, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. LAND DISPOSAL RESTRICTIONS.

"Section 3004(g) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding after paragraph (6) the following:

"(7) Solid waste identified as hazardous based solely on one or more characteristics shall not be subject to this subsection, any prohibitions under subsection (d), (e), or (f), or any requirement promulgated under subsection (m) (other than any applicable specific methods of treatment, as provided in paragraph (8)) if the waste—

"(A) is treated in a treatment system that subsequently discharges to waters of the United States pursuant to a permit issued under section 402 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (commonly known as the "Clean Water Act") (33 U.S.C. 1342), treated for the purposes of the pretreatment requirements of section 307 of the Clean Water Act (33 U.S.C. 1317), or treated in a zero discharge system that, prior to any permanent land disposal, engages in treatment that is equivalent to treatment required under section 402 of the Clean Water Act (33 U.S.C. 1342) for discharges to waters of the United States, as determined by the Administrator; and

"(B) no longer exhibits a hazardous characteristic prior to management in any land-based solid waste management unit.

"(8) Solid waste that otherwise qualifies under paragraph (7) shall nevertheless be required to meet any applicable specific methods of treatment specified for such waste by the Administrator under subsection (m), including those specified in the rule promulgated by the Administrator June 1, 1990, prior to management in a land-based unit as part of a treatment system specified in paragraph (7)(A). No solid waste may qualify under paragraph (7) that would generate toxic gases, vapors, or fumes due to the presence of cyanide when exposed to pH conditions between 2.0 and 12.5.

"(9) Solid waste identified as hazardous based on one or more characteristics alone shall not be subject to this subsection, any prohibitions under subsection (d), (e), or (f), or any requirement promulgated under subsection (m) if the waste no longer exhibits a hazardous characteristic at the point of injection in any Class I injection well permitted under section 1422 of title XIV of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300h–1).

"(10) Not later than five years after the date of enactment of this paragraph, the Administrator shall complete a study of hazardous waste managed pursuant to paragraphs (7) or (9) to characterize the risks to human health or the environment associated with such management. In conducting this study, the Administrator shall evaluate the extent to which risks are adequately addressed under existing State or Federal programs and whether unaddressed risks could be better addressed under such laws or programs. Upon receipt of additional information or upon completion of such study and as necessary to protect human health and the environment, the Administrator may impose additional requirements under existing Federal laws, including subsection (m)(1), or rely on other State or Federal programs or authorities to address such risks. In promulgating any treatment standards pursuant to subsection (m)(1) under the previous sentence, the Administrator shall take into account the extent to which treatment is occurring in land-based units as part of a treatment system specified in paragraph (7)(A).

"(11) Nothing in paragraphs (7) or (9) shall be interpreted or applied to restrict any inspection or enforcement authority under the provisions of this Act.".

On page 7, after line 12, insert the following:

"(5) ALASKA NATIVE VILLAGES.—Upon certification by the Governor of the State of Alaska that application of the requirements described in paragraph (1) to a solid waste landfill unit of a Native village (as defined in section 3 of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (16 U.S.C. 1602)) or unit that is located in or near a small, remote Alaska village would be infeasible, or would not be cost-effective, or is otherwise inappropriate because of the remote location of the unit, the State may exempt the unit from some or all of those requirements. This paragraph shall apply only to solid waste landfill units that dispose of less than 20 tons of municipal solid waste daily, based on an annual average.

"(6) FURTHER REVISIONS OF GUIDELINES AND CRITERIA.—Recognizing the unique circumstances of small communities, the Administrator shall, not later than two years after enactment of this provision promulgate revisions to the guidelines and criteria promulgated under this subtitle to provide additional flexibility to approved States to allow landfills that receive 20 tons or less of municipal solid waste per day, based on an annual average, to use alternative frequencies of daily cover application, frequencies of methane gas monitoring, infiltration layers for final cover, and means for demonstrating financial assurance: Provided, That such alternative requirements take into account climatic and hydrogeologic conditions and are protective of human health and environment.".

PORTLAND STATE UNIVERSITY'S 50TH ANNIVERSARY

• Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, Portland State University is celebrating its 50th anniversary this year. Although that is a relatively short life in the history of America's higher education movement, Portland State University has quickly developed into one of the Nation's premier urban universities.

This remarkable university began as the Vanport Extension Center, located in one of Portland's public housing projects. It was an educational resource for many of Oregon's returning World War II veterans. Two years after the Center was established, the famous Memorial Day flood destroyed the campus, but not the college. Even the Christian Science Monitor published a national story about the Vanport's resurrection, calling it "The College That Would Not Die."

The college relocated to its current site in the South Park blocks area of downtown Portland in 1952. In 1955, my first term in the Oregon State Senate, the legislature officially designated it as Portland State College. At that time, the enrollment at PSC was more than 3,300 students—up from 221 Vanport students enrolled during its first term. In 1969, as the college introduced its first doctoral program, the legislature granted it university status.

Today, Portland State University is a national model of the urban university. Its mission is to enhance the intellectual, social, cultural, and economic qualities of urban life, and to promote the development of community-institutional networks and collaborations to address community priorities through academic and research programs. The university offers 32 bachelor's and 398 master's degrees in the humanities, sciences, social sciences, and professions, as well as doctoral degrees in seven areas: Education, electrical and computer engineering, environmental sciences and resources, public administration and policy, social work and social research, systems science, and urban studies and planning. PSU's programs are so widely accepted in Oregon that it offers one-quarter of the State's graduate degrees annually.

My wife, Antoinette, and I have been involved in this great university since its early days. Antoinette worked at Portland State College as its counselor to women. During my tenure in state government, the institution emerged as one of the State's major educational resources. As Governor, I was proud to sign the legislation that authorized funding for Portland State University's prestigious graduate school of social work. During my service as Senator, I have been pleased to work with Portland State University on legislation that established and funded the Urban Community Services Program in the Department of Education. Portland State University was one of the first universities in the Nation to qualify for one of these grants that provides seed money to help extend academic resources to urban communities.

Celebrating the 50-year milestone is important—for institutions and for individuals—but Portland State University is looking toward the future and making its mark in the national higher education movement. If the past half century is any indication, we can expect Portland State University to make significant contributions in Oregon and in the Nation as it approaches its centennial celebration. Portland State University is developing a model learning community in the heart of downtown that will include new, multifamily affordable housing, connections with public transit and the light rail system, expansion of retail and commercial businesses in the neighborhood, and the development of urban open spaces and parks. I know of no other university in the country that is working so closely with local government to link its resources to the needs of the community and revitalize its neighborhood.

Portland State University has received national recognition for improving its general education curriculum. Students now take courses that are communication-intensive, interdisciplinary and team-taught, and include extensive community involvement and service learning components. This new curriculum responds to concerns expressed by business, policy leaders, and students that traditional general education programs have not served today's students well. Called the University Studies Program, this innovative approach to providing undergraduates and integrated overview of the core subject areas is a model for colleges and universities across the country.

Portland State University is also a success story because of its approach to administrative reform and commitment to the principles of quality management. In recent years, the university has engaged in an extensive reorganization of its management operation. Portland State University has reduced its administrative and management staff while still maintaining a high level of service and productivity. The national consulting group, KPMG Peat Marwick has called PSU "a national model" for efficient management. And, the National Association of College and University Business Officers recently presented the university with a national award for its management reform efforts.

Making a difference, that is what Portland State University is all about. When it began, it made a difference to those veterans returning home from World War II. It provided them the chance to get an education while working and living in Portland. And, it continues to make a difference in the lives of Oregonians. Today, Portland State University—in partnership with community organizations—makes a difference in the lives of inner-city youngsters by exposing them to higher education early in life so they can realize that a college degree is within their grasp. Portland State University makes a difference in the lives of high school students who otherwise might not be able to afford a college education away from home. Portland State University makes a difference to the working professional who needs an advanced degree in order to stay current in their field, earn a higher wage, or qualify for a promotion. In short, Portland State University is crucial to Oregon's citizens and its economic future.

On the occasion of its 50th anniversary, I want to extend my sincere congratulations to the faculty, staff, and students who have contributed to PSU's success. I look forward to the exciting contributions this remarkable institution will make in the 21st century.•

THE BLACK REVOLUTIONARY WAR PATRIOTS COMMEMORATIVE COIN ACT

• Mr. FAIRCLOTH. Mr. President, I wish to express my support for S. 953, the Black Revolutionary War Patriots Commemorative Coin Act. The coin will be minted to assist the effort to build a national memorial to these often overlooked soldiers in our War for Independence. Tax dollars will not be used to build this memorial, and, consequently, its construction will be funded from the proceeds of the sales of this coin.

Their stories are tales of sacrifice and valor in battle, and, although the names of these patriots are not found in most textbooks, these soldiers fought for their young nation in some of the great engagements of the Revolutionary War. Record Primes, for example, compiled a long record and fought in some of the most storied battles of the War. He served in Colonel Williams' North Carolina regiment at the battles of Camden and Kings Mountain in 1780 and Guilford Court House, Yorktown, Eutaw Springs, and Cowpens in 1781.

There are others, courageous black North Carolinians such as Joel Taburn, who battled the British under Colonels Archibald Lytle and Hardy Murfree in their North Carolina regiment. He fought at the siege of Charleston in 1780 and at Eutaw Springs in 1781. For example, William Steward, who had signed on with Col. John Patten's North Carolina regiment, saw action at Monmouth. Isaac Perkins, William Taburn, and Dempsey Stewart also fought for North Carolina regiments, and, Mr. President, these are the soldiers whom the memorial will honor.

These men volunteered for duty—they were not compelled to serve—and this memorial, which will be on a site just north of the reflecting pool, will honor their sacrifice in the cause of freedom. I therefore urge my colleagues to lend their support to this bill and wish to thank Senator CHAFEE for his efforts on its behalf.

MAN OF THE YEAR

• Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I want to bring to the Senate's attention the accomplishments of an amazing young man. I first met Doug Wilson in connection with legislation that I sponsored to encourage States to pass universal motorcycle helmet laws. This legislation was included in the Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act of 1991 [ISTEA] and Doug was very helpful to me in getting this law passed. But Doug didn't stop there. He has worked tirelessly at the State level, encouraging State legislatures to pass effective motorcycle helmet laws. Doug was instrumental in convincing the Maryland Legislature to pass a universal motorcycle helmet law.

Doug is a very convincing young man. Unfortunately, one of the reasons he is so convincing is because he has experienced first hand the consequences of being involved in a motorcycle crash without a helmet. Doug's injuries were minor except for a severe brain injury—the result of hitting his head on the pavement. His journey to recovery has been long and difficult but it also has been extraordinary. His accomplishments are many and the Journal in Maryland has just named Doug Wilson its "Man of the Year."

Mr. President, I cannot think of a more deserving person to be the "Man of the Year." Since Congress unfortunately repealed the Federal motorcycle requirements recently in the National Highway System Designation Act, I am particularly grateful that Doug, and others like him, are working at the State level to educate people about the benefits of wearing motorcycle helmets and the terrible consequences when they do not. I want to congratulate Doug and wish him the very best in whatever he chooses to undertake in the future. I ask that the Journal article recognizing Doug's accomplishments be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

AFTER A BRUSH WITH DEATH, HE LEADS FULL LIFE

(By Sean Scully)

Doug Wilson was never supposed to walk or talk again following a severe motorcycle accident almost five years ago.

But in September, he ran a 5-kilometer race—the third annual Doug Wilson Thumbs Up race—and he's eager to talk about it.

"I was in the hospital for three months [in 1991]," Wilson said. "It never made me upset because I said I was going to be fine, I never thought [running] was something I'd never be able to do again."

In the spring of 1991, Wilson was a senior at the University of South Carolina, only six weeks away from an economics degree. The athletic and good-looking Wilson had been a soccer player at Churchill High School in Potomac and a place-kicker for the university's Gamecocks football team. He seemed to have it all.

Then it came crashing down. For a still-unknown reason, Wilson lost control of his motorcycle on a clear, straight road. He fell and struck his head on the pavement. He wasn't wearing a helmet.

The accident only broke three bones, but it jarred his brain severely, causing swelling and plunging Wilson into an eight-day coma.

He spent three months in the hospital and six months in a wheelchair. Over the next four years, he had to relearn the tasks most of us take for granted.

"I have an appreciation for certain things most of the whole world wouldn't understand," said Wilson, who has only the slightest hesitation of speech, along with a shuffle in his walk, giving clues to the serious injury he has overcome.

But Wilson's recovery is more than a personal journey for him. It has involved his entire community.

When he first began to walk again, Wilson said, he volunteered to help with local youth sports. Kids and parents rallied around him, he said. The kids would pick him to play on basketball teams, even though he could barely walk, let alone run and jump.

"They said, 'we don't care, we just want you on the team,'" Wilson said.

He received so much support that he's made it a mission to give something back.

"I learned to respect kids," Wilson said, "I help them because they helped me."

Wilson, now 27, lives with his parents in Potomac.

His list of activities is impressive, long enough that he has trouble remembering them all: He is one of the original volunteers at Club Friday, a youth program at the Potomac Community Center, he is a youth soccer instructor for Montgomery Soccer Inc.; he serves on two county recreational advisory boards; he helped found the Potomac Adaptive Basketball Association; he is an active member of the Rotary Club of Potomac, and he founded the annual 5-kilometer race, which benefits Club Friday and the Brain Injury Association of Maryland.

"To me, he's just a super human being," said Potomac resident Randy Zeibert, whose children played on a soccer team coached by Wilson. "He does all these things and asks nothing in return."

In the wake of his accident, Wilson made it a personal quest to see Maryland and other states adopt mandatory motorcycle helmet laws. His testimony was a key factor in Maryland's law, which narrowly passed the General Assembly four years ago, said former state Sen. Howard Denis.

Denis said he was wavering on the bill, torn between his desire to prevent devastating injuries and his belief that the government should not place to many restrictions on the public. In the end, Wilson pushed Denis to back the law.

"Doug was a particularly compelling witness because he had lived through it and he was very articulate," Denis said.

On top of all his other activities, Wilson returned to South Carolina for a semester in 1993 and earned his degree.

"I wasn't supposed to walk again, so I walked," Wilson said. "I wasn't supposed to go to college and take classes, so I went back and graduated with my best semester in college."

Despite volunteering at least 50 hours a week," Wilson has started a business, called "We'll Keep It Clean," hiring disabled people to clean and maintain people's property; yard work, pool cleaning, and the like.

Disabled people, he said, make excellent workers because. "they're not interested in doing it for the money; they're out there trying to prove they can do it."

On top of that, Wilson lobbies state lawmakers nationwide to pass motorcycle helmet laws similar to the one he helped pass in Maryland.

"He's just gung-ho about life," said Sam Eammelli, past president of the Rotary Club. "I think it's great."

The key, Wilson said, is to set goals high. That way people can fall a little bit short and still do better than anybody else expects.

And his goals remain high.

"Maybe someday," he said with a twinkle in his eye, "I'm going to try out for an NFL team."•

LAND DISPOSAL PROGRAM FLEXIBILITY ACT OF 1995

Mr. LOTT. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Environment and Public Works be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 2036 and, further, that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2036) to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act and make certain adjustments in the lands disposal program to provide needed flexibility, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 3464

(Purpose: To amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act, to make certain adjustments in the land disposal program to provide needed flexibility, and for other purposes)

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senators CHAFEE, SMITH, DOLE, LIEBERMAN, NICKLES, and KEMPTHORNE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT], for Mr. Chafee, for himself, Mr. Smith, Mr. Dole, Mr. Lieberman, Mr. Nickles, and Mr. Kempthorne, proposes an amendment numbered 3464.

Mr. LOTT. I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, beginning line 4, strike all through page 4, line 15, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. LAND DISPOSAL RESTRICTIONS.

"Section 3004(g) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding after paragraph (6) the following:

"(7) Solid waste identified as hazardous based solely on one or more characteristics shall not be subject to this subsection, any prohibitions under subsection (d), (e), or (f), or any requirement promulgated under subsection (m) (other than any applicable specific methods of treatment, as provided in paragraph (8)) if the waste—

"(A) is treated in a treatment system that subsequently discharges to waters of the United States pursuant to a permit issued under section 402 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (commonly known as the "Clean Water Act") (33 U.S.C. 1342), treated for the purposes of the pretreatment requirements of section 307 of the Clean Water Act (33 U.S.C. 1317), or treated in a zero discharge system that, prior to any permanent land disposal, engages in treatment that is equivalent to treatment required under section 402 of the Clean Water Act (33 U.S.C. 1342) for discharges to waters of the United States, as determined by the Administrator; and

"(B) no longer exhibits a hazardous characteristic prior to management in any land-based solid waste management unit.

"(8) Solid waste that otherwise qualifies under paragraph (7) shall nevertheless be required to meet any applicable specific methods of treatment specified for such waste by the Administrator under subsection (m), including those specified in the rule promulgated by the Administrator June 1, 1990, prior to management in a land-based unit as part of a treatment system specified in paragraph (7)(A). No solid waste may qualify under paragraph (7) that would generate toxic gases, vapors, or fumes due to the presence of cyanide when exposed to pH conditions between 2.0 and 12.5.

"(9) Solid waste identified as hazardous based on one or more characteristics alone shall not be subject to this subsection, any prohibitions under subsection (d), (e), or (f), or any requirement promulgated under subsection (m) if the waste no longer exhibits a hazardous characteristic at the point of injection in any Class I injection well permitted under section 1422 of title XIV of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300h–1).

"(10) Not later than five years after the date of enactment of this paragraph, the Administrator shall complete a study of hazardous waste managed pursuant to paragraphs (7) or (9) to characterize the risks to human health or the environment associated with such management. In conducting this study, the Administrator shall evaluate the extent to which risks are adequately addressed under existing State or Federal programs and whether unaddressed risks could be better addressed under such laws or programs. Upon receipt of additional information or upon completion of such study and as necessary to protect human health and the environment, the Administrator may impose additional requirements under existing Federal laws, including subsection (m)(1), or rely on other State or Federal programs or authorities to address such risks. In promulgating any treatment standard pursuant to subsection (m)(1) under the previous sentence, the Administrator shall take into account the extent to which treatment is occurring in land-based units as part of a treatment system specified in paragraph (7)(A).

"(11) Nothing in paragraphs (7) or (9) shall be interpreted or applied to restrict any inspection or enforcement authority under the provisions of this Act.".

On page 7, after line 12, insert the following:

"(5) ALASKA NATIVE VILLAGES.—Upon certification by the Governor of the State of Alaska that application of the requirements described in paragraph (1) to a solid waste landfill unit of a Native village (as defined in section 3 of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (16 U.S.C. 1602)) or unit that is located in or near a small, remote Alaska village would be infeasible, or would not be cost-effective, or is otherwise inappropriate because of the remote location of the unit, the State may exempt the unit from some or all of those requirements. This paragraph shall apply only to solid waste landfill units that dispose of less than 20 tons of municipal solid waste daily, based on an annual average.

"(6) FURTHER REVISIONS OF GUIDELINES AND CRITERIA.—Recognizing the unique circumstances of small communities, the Administrator shall, not later than two years after enactment of this provision promulgate revisions to the guidelines and criteria promulgated under this subtitle to provide additional flexibility to approved States to allow landfills that receive 20 tons or less of municipal solid waste per day, based on an annual average, to use alternative frequencies of daily cover application, frequencies of methane gas monitoring, infiltration layers for final cover, and means for demonstrating financial assurance: Provided, That such alternative requirements take into account climatic and hydrogeologic conditions and are protective of human health and environment.".

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, today I rise to offer an amendment to H.R. 2036, the Land Disposal Program Flexibility Act. This bill, which on January 31, 1996, passed in the House of Representatives by a vote of 402 to 19, amends the so-called land ban provisions of the Solid Waste Disposal Act. Senator NICKLES introduced a similar bill in the Senate, S. 1497, which was cosponsored by Senators SMITH, PRYOR, BOND, BUMPERS, INHOFE, LOTT, BREAUX, JOHNSTON, ABRAHAM, KEMPTHORNE, LIEBERMAN, FAIRCLOTH, GLENN, and WARNER.

H.R. 2036 and its Senate companion, S. 1497, provide a model for moving targeted, commonsense legislation that maintains protection of human health and the environment while removing duplicative or overlapping layers of regulation. It is proof that we can fix those parts of our environmental laws that need to be fixed without gutting, repealing, or rolling back environmental protection.

H.R. 2036 passed the House of Representatives by an overwhelming margin. The legislation is strongly supported by the Clinton administration. A joint letter signed by EPA, CEQ, and OMB stated that the bill "would eliminate a mandate that the Environmental Protection Agency" promulgate stringent and costly treatment standards for certain low-risk wastes that already are regulated in Clean Water Act or Safe Drinking Water Act units." I believe that H.R. 2036, as amended today, ensures protection of human health and the environment while easing two specific regulatory burdens imposed by the Solid Waste Disposal Act. In both instances, EPA tried to reduce these regulatory burdens through administrative action but the Agency was rebuffed by the courts. That is why this legislation is necessary. Time is of the essence because the Agency is under court order to promulgate new rules under the current law. If we are going to provide relief, now is the time to do it.

The primary purpose of this bill is to prevent duplicative and inconsistent regulation of a specific, limited category of wastes under the Solid Waste Disposal Act. The premise underlying the bill is that certain low risk, high volume waste streams that are treated to remove any hazardous characteristics and that are subsequently discharged in a manner meeting the standards of section 402 of the Clean Water Act or are injected in class I wells that have received individual permits under the Safe Drinking Water Act, need not be subject to the land disposal restrictions under RCRA.

In 1990 regulations to implement the Solid Waste Disposal Act's land ban provisions, EPA reasoned that if low risk, high volume wastes were being treated in a manner that protects human health and the environment under the Clean Water Act in a treatment system or are injected into a Safe Drinking Water Act permitted deep well injection system, then there was insufficient justification for imposing additional, and perhaps inconsistent land ban treatment standards under the Solid Waste Disposal Act. EPA's rule was challenged in court, and the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit overturned EPA's approach.

This bill will allow EPA to grant some relief from the requirements of the Solid Waste Disposal Act while undertaking a study to assure that the conclusions the Agency reached in 1990 are still valid. It is important to note that this bill retains the Agency's authority to impose land ban restrictions and treatment standards under the Solid Waste Disposal Act if it is found to be necessary in the future.

The bill will also allow EPA to reimpose another rule vacated by the courts; a rule exempting certain small municipal solid waste landfills from groundwater monitoring requirements. This provision in H.R. 2036, as added by this amendment, conforms with the language in S. 534, the Interstate Transportation of Municipal Solid Waste Act, which passed the Senate on May 16, 1995.

This amendment contains several modifications to the House-passed bill that will ensure that risks to human health or the environment from decharacterized wastes receiving treatment equivalent to that required by section 402 of the Clean Water Act or injected in deep well injection units that have received individual permits under the Safe Drinking Water Act are minimized. The amendment provides that all of the Solid Waste Disposal Act inspection and enforcement authorities are preserved and will continue to apply to so-called decharacterized wastes even if the waste is not subject to the land disposal ban requirements as a result of this bill. The amendment protects against potential misuse and the use of "sham" treatment systems by requiring treatment in Clean Water Act impoundments, not merely holding or storing waste in the impoundment while it evaporates or settles or, worst of all, leaches into ground water. The amendment also makes it clear that the Administrator may act to impose additional requirements upon receipt of information regarding the risks posed to human health and the environment by the wastes managed under this act. If the Administrator decides the imposition of additional requirements is warranted, the authority is there to do so. The Administrator does not have to wait for the results of the study.

I want to thank Senator NICKLES, Senator SMITH, chairman of the Environment and Public Works subcommittee with jurisdiction over hazardous waste, and the other cosponsors of the bill for bringing these issues to the attention of the Senate. I especially want to thank my colleagues on the Environment and Public Works Committee for agreeing to clear H.R. 2036 for rapid floor action. I urge your support for this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3464) was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am pleased to be here today to urge the adoption of H.R. 2036 as modified by an amendment of the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works. The underlying House legislation is virtually the same as S. 1497, the Land Disposal and Program Flexibility Act of 1995 that Senator NICKLES and I, along with a broad bipartisan coalition of our colleagues, introduced on December 21, 1995.

Under the current land disposal restrictions [LDR's], individuals are generally prohibited from the land disposal of hazardous wastes unless these wastes have first been treated to meet EPA standards. In Chemical Waste Management versus EPA in 1992, the D.C. Circuit Court determined that these LDR's would also be extended to nonhazardous wastes managed in wastewater systems that are already regulated under the Clean Water Act or the underground injection control [UIC] program of the Safe Drinking Water Act. The court adopted this position despite the fact that the EPA had previously adopted a rule authorizing the appropriate treatment and disposal of these materials, and despite the fact that the Agency believed that such strict standards are inappropriate.

Section 2 of H.R. 2036, as modified by the Senate, would counteract the court's decision and would restore the EPA's original regulatory determination allowing these materials to be safely treated and disposed of in permitted treatment units and injection wells. This change represents a very straightforward yet significant modification to the Solid Waste Disposal Act that has the potential to save our society as much as $800 million in annual compliance costs—an expense that the EPA agrees will provide no environmental benefit.

Another issue that is addressed in the Senate amended version of H.R. 2036 is the issue of ground water monitoring legislation. In October 1991, the EPA promulgated regulations to exempt certain categories of municipal solid waste landfills from ground water monitoring requirements. Specifically, this exemption was intended to provide relief for communities that had a daily disposal rate of less than 20 tons of solid waste and which have very little annual precipitation. The EPA's authority to issue these regulations was overturned by the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals in Natural Resources Defense Council versus EPA, 1993.

Section 3 of H.R. 2036, as amended by the Senate amendment, is a virtually identical version of ground water monitoring language that the Senate passed on May 16, 1995, when it adopted the Interstate Transportation of Municipal Solid Waste Act of 1995. This section will provide EPA with the necessary authority to implement the ground water monitoring regulations that were struck down in Natural Resources Defense Council versus EPA.

As the chairman of the Superfund, Waste Control and Risk Assessment Subcommittee, which has jurisdiction over this legislation, I believe that this bill is a good example of a cooperative, bipartisan effort to correct expensive and needless environmental overregulation. I appreciate the significant time and effort that were spent by my fellow Members, the White House, the EPA, our House colleagues, and staff, toward speeding the adoption of this much needed legislation. In addition to this support, I would note that H.R. 2036 is also supported by the Association of State and Territorial Solid Waste Management Officials, the National Association of Counties, and the Ground Water Protection Council.

We need to act quickly to adopt this legislation. If we fail to act, the EPA, due to court order, will be forced to implement additional LDR regulations in the next few weeks—regulations that they believe are both unnecessary from an environmental standpoint as well as needlessly costly for the private sector. Our House colleagues understood this urgency and passed H.R. 2036 on January 31 by a vote of 402 to 19. Given the level of support for this important legislation, I would urge my colleagues to unanimously adopt this legislation as amended so we can send it to President Clinton as soon as possible.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the House has sent us a bill, H.R. 2036, to amend the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, to prevent the duplication of regulation on dischargers of nonhazardous waste and thereby save hundreds of millions of dollars in unnecessary compliance costs. It is a laudable bill.

Unfortunately, the House has yet to send to the Senate another needed change to the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act in this Congress, a bill to resolve a matter of great importance to me and to most of the 80,000 units of local government in this country. I am talking about addressing their jeopardized ability to regulate the inflow and outflow of solid waste in their jurisdiction.

As my colleagues know, the Senate passed S. 534, the Interstate Transportation of Solid Waste Act of 1995, in May of last year. This bill is not perfect but it contains amendments needed to resolve some of the interstate waste and flow control issues raised in Supreme Court decisions from several years ago.

Interstate transportation and flow control of solid waste are pressing matters, as is H.R. 2036. Despite this, the House has yet to act on S. 534 or similar legislation. This concerns me. Last week, I sought to add S. 534 as an amendment to H.R. 2036 by unanimous consent, but was met with objections.

Mr. President, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee if he would help me in insisting that the House promptly address this matter so that we might get a swift resolution.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan states the situation accurately. It is unfortunate that the House has not yet acted on S. 534 or a similar bill. I will certainly work with him to ensure that the House understands that enactment of S. 534 is a priority for the Senate in this Congress. And, the Senator certainly retains his right to offer S. 534 to other vehicles, should he so choose. In the meantime, I appreciate his willingness not to stall progress on moving H.R. 2036.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank the Senator from Rhode Island. I hope he will work with me on other vehicles to which I can attach S. 534 in the very near future, if the House fails to act promptly.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the bill be deemed read a third time, passed as amended, and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating to the bill be placed at the appropriate place in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

So the bill (H.R. 2036), as amended, was deemed read the third time and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF GEORGE W. BLACK, JR., TO BE A MEMBER OF THE NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION SAFETY BOARD

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the nomination of George W. Black, Jr., to be a member of the National Transportation Safety Board reported out of the Commerce Committee today, that the nomination be confirmed, any statements on the nomination be inserted in the RECORD as if read, and that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action on this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Hearing no objection, it is so ordered.

The nomination considered and confirmed is as follows:

George W. Black, Jr., of Georgia, to be a member of the National Transportation Safety Board for the remainder of the term expiring December 31, 1996, vice Carl W. Vogt, resigned.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. LOTT. I ask now that the Senate return to legislative session.

REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY—TREATY DOCUMENT NO. 104–24

Mr. LOTT. As in executive session, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of December 10, 1982, relating to the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks, with annexes, which was adopted by the U.N. headquarters in New York by consensus of the U.N. Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks on August 4, 1995, and signed by the United States on December 4, 1995, (Treaty Document 104–24), transmitted to the Senate by the President on February 20, 1996; and ask that the treaty be considered as having been read the first time; that it be referred, with accompanying papers, to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed; and that the President's message be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The message of the President is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 Relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks, with Annexes ("the Agreement"), which was adopted at United Nations Headquarters in New York by consensus of the United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks on August 4, 1995, and signed by the United States on December 4, 1995. I also transmit, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Secretary of State with respect to the Agreement.

The Agreement represents a considerable achievement for the United States in promoting better stewardship of living marine resources. It strikes a sound balance between the interests of coastal States in protecting offshore fishery resources and those of States whose fishing vessels operate on the high seas. If widely ratified and properly implemented, the Agreement should significantly improve the prospects for sustainable fisheries worldwide.

The Agreement builds directly upon, and strengthens, the fishery provisions contained in the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea ("the Convention"), which I transmitted to the Senate for advice and consent on October 6, 1994. As such, the Agreement further reflects the central role of the Convention in governing the maritime relations of the international community.

Perhaps more than any other nation, the United States stands to benefit from widespread adherence to this Agreement. The Agreement will help to ensure that the harvesting of fish by vessels of other nations in waters beyond our exclusive economic zone does not undermine our domestic management of fisheries within the U.S. jurisdiction. In addition, by promoting sound conservation practices generally, the Agreement can restore and maintain productive ocean fisheries for the benefit of American consumers and for U.S. fishing vessels wherever they operate.

With regard to disputes concerning the interpretation or application of the Agreement, I intend to choose a special arbitral tribunal constituted in accordance with Annex VIII of the Convention, as recommended in the accompanying report of the Department of State.

I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to the Agreement and give its advice and consent to its ratification.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 20, 1996.

PROGRAM

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, under the previous order, when the Senate completes its business today it will stand in adjournment until the hour of 11 a.m. on Friday, February 23, and following the prayer, there be a period for morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 1 p.m., with the time to be divided equally between the two parties. As previously ordered, following the use or yielding back of time on Friday, morning business will be closed and the Senate will then turn to the conference report to accompany the D.C. appropriations bill. No rollcall votes will occur on Friday, however, the Senate may consider any legislative items cleared for action.

It is anticipated at this time that a cloture motion on the conference report will be filed on Friday and Senators should be aware that a vote on motion to invoke cloture on the D.C. appropriations conference report would be expected to occur on Tuesday, February 27, at 2:15 p.m.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 11 A.M., FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1996

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask the Senate now stand in adjournment under the previous order.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 12:54 p.m., adjourned until Friday, February 23, 1996, at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, February 20, 1996

The House met at 11 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mrs. MORELLA].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray using the words of Psalm 121:

I lift up my eyes to the hills; from where is my help to come?
My help comes from the Lord, the maker of heaven and earth.
He will not let your foot be moved and He who watches over you will not fall asleep.
Behold, He who keeps watch over Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep;
The Lord himself watches over you; the Lord is your shade at your right hand,
So that the sun shall not strike you by day, nor the moon by night.
The Lord shall preserve you from all evil;
it is He who shall keep you safe.
The Lord shall watch over your going out and your coming in, from this time forth forevermore.

Amen.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

SALUTE TO THE COMMUNITY OF LINCOLN PARK

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 20, 1996

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute the community of Lincoln Park, which celebrates its105th anniversary this year.

Located in the city of Rockville, MD, Lincoln Park has managed to keep the history and traditions of a self-contained community. Lincoln Park is a predominantly African-American community, unique not only for the respect with which it treats its heritage, but also for the manner in which its residents have chosen to connect with one another. They have continued their dedication to working as a community, in the same manner that their ancestors did long ago.

The Lincoln Park community was started in February 1891 when Mr. William Welsh purchased several tracts of land in a place known as Valentine Garden Enlarged. On June 30, 1891, Ms. Ella Martin became the first black landowner at Lincoln Park, purchasing her land for $80. Deaconess Helda Martin became Lincoln Park's second black landowner that same day, also for the sum of $80. Descendants of these original landowners still live in Lincoln Park, a sign of the great respect that this community reserves for its history.

With the month of February designated Black History Month, it is only to be expected that a community so rich in African-American history would seek to share and explore its roots. The Lincoln Park Historical Society will be having their 19th Annual Black History Program at Richard Montgomery High School on February 24. As befits a group of citizens who truly believe in the concept of a community, this program will focus on the young people of our society whose hopes and dreams will be the future of Lincoln Park and of America.

The willingness to work for a true sense of community gives Lincoln Park a mission which is all too unique in today's society. The effort to retain and continue the traditions of their history give the community respect for their ancestors and vision for their descendants. For 105 years the people of Lincoln Park have dedicated themselves to this ethos, and for 105 years neighbors have greeted each other by name and taken pride in what they, as a unit, have built.

Mr. Speaker, it is a proud moment for me to pay tribute to Anita Neal Powell, founding president of the Lincoln Park Historical Society [LPHS], Deacon Leroy Neal, vice president of the LPHS, and William Gordon, who will be the historical conductor for the anniversary program, for their hard work and their dedication in preserving and promoting the rich history of this important community. I hope that everyone will join me in wishing the whole Lincoln Park community a most happy and successful 105th anniversary.

IN HONOR OF MICHELE RUSSO FOR DISTINGUISHED AND DEDICATED SERVICE TO THE CITIZENS OF HOBOKEN

HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ

OF NEW JERSEY

Tuesday, February 20, 1996

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Michele Russo, an outstanding individual who has distinguished herself by her selfless dedication to the residents of Hoboken. Ms. Russo will be honored today at the Ninth Annual Lincoln Day Dinner sponsored by Senator Bernard F. Kenny and the Lincoln Day Dinner Committee.

The commemoration celebrates the generous contributions made by Ms. Russo to her hometown of Hoboken. Lincoln's birthday is an appropriate day to celebrate Ms. Russo's achievements because of her talent in unifying people. As an active member of the Anthony Russo Civic Organization, Ms. Russo's coordination of community programs has earned much respect. In one program, local senior citizens have been fortunate recipients of flowers on major holidays. For the past 2 years, FAITH Service, an AIDS resource center, has greatly benefited from an event co-chaired by Ms. Russo.

Family plays a major role for our esteemed honoree. A lifelong resident of Hoboken, Ms. Russo is the former Michele DeStefano, daughter of Mary and Pasquale DeStefano. When it came time to think about marriage, Michele married Anthony Russo who was subsequently elected mayor of Hoboken. This joyful union produced three sons to carry on the family tradition of community involvement: Nicky, Michael, and Anthony.

Ms. Russo has a strong interest in building a bright and positive future for the youth of Hoboken. She was instrumental in securing funding to erect the Florence Reilly Casazza concession stand at Hoboken High School's JFK Stadium. Ms. Russo is an active committee member of Boy Scout Troop 20 at St. Ann's Church in Hoboken.

It is an honor to have such an outstanding and considerate woman residing in my district. Michele Russo exemplifies community service at its best. I am certain my colleagues will join me in recognition of this superb community leader.

HONORING THE LATE ALEC COURTELIS

HON. E. CLAY SHAW, JR.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 20, 1996

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a remarkable Floridian, Alec Courtelis, who died last month at the age of 68. Alec's life defined the American success story. He came to America as a 20-year-old Greek immigrant and persevered to achieve great success as a Florida developer, breeder of Arabian racehorses, chairman of the board of regents, and as a major player in the national political arena.

As a teenager growing up in Alexandria, Egypt, Alec watched John Wayne movies and dreamed of one day moving to America. At 20, he was accepted to the University of Miami and traveled 7,000 miles across the Mediterranean and Atlantic to begin life in a country that would not inhibit his hopes and aspirations.

Upon graduation from the University of Miami, Alec worked as an engineer for 5 years before launching a thriving career in real estate development and construction. Under Alec's direction, Florida swamps and sandpits were converted into lavish housing developments and upscale shopping malls. Included in Alec's projects were the Falls in South Dade, Skylake in Northeast Dade, Town Park Estates in the Coral Park area, and University Lakes in Miami.

Alec strongly embraced this country and the belief that each person can make a difference. He became well entrenched in the political arena, not only locally, but on a national scale. Alec's accomplishments were not limited to real estate and politics; he was also a major player in the Arabian racehorse business. The Courtelis owned a 320-acre farm near Gainesville that provided both a home for their champion stallions and a place for the family to spend time together.

Perhaps the triumph for which Alec will be best remembered was his battle with cancer. When Alec was diagnosed with inoperable pancreatic cancer in 1993, he told doctors that he could not accept their prognosis; he still had too much to do. Although Alec was told to get his estate in order as he had only a few months left, he beat the odds for 2 incredible years and attributed his success to psychotherapy and a positive mental attitude. He devoted himself to legitimizing alternative treatments and to sharing his amazing experience with others. The University of Miami's new Courtelis Center for Research and Treatment in Psychosocial Oncology furthers Alec's devotion to lending validity to alternative treatments and provides new hope for its patients.

A sign at Alec's farm read, "It's performance that counts." This is a motto that Alec abided by throughout his life. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring the life of Alec Courtelis.

SENATE—Friday, February 23, 1996

The Senate met at 11 a.m., and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Dear God, bless America, beginning with these Senators on whom You have placed so much responsibility and from whom You expect so much. You have brought them to the Senate at this time, not only for what You want to do through them in leading this Nation, but also for what You intend to exemplify to the Nation in the way they work and live together.

You have revealed in Scripture, through the generations, and in our own experience, that You pour out Your power when there is unity, mutual esteem, and affirmation of the oneness of our patriotism. Bless us with Your spirit so that we may disagree without being disagreeable, share our convictions without being contentious, and lift up truth without putting each other down. Help us to seek to convince without coercion, persuade without power moves, motivate without manipulation. May we trust You unreservedly and encourage each other unselfishly. In the name of our Lord. Amen.

THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CHINA

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I rise today to talk about the relationship between the United States and China.

Last summer the Aspen Strategy Group—cochaired by Ken Dam and myself—under Director Michael Armacost and Associate Director Bruce Berkowitz met in Aspen, CO, for 4 days. We had an intensive and productive discussion with a number of China experts participating, including Michel Okensberg, Chas. Freeman, and Stapleton Roy. The views of all three of these American China experts and my subsequent discussions with Michel Oksenberg, Charles Freeman, and others have been very helpful in my own analysis of United States-China relations.

I also made a recent trip to Asia that included a stimulating and informative forum in Malaysia sponsored by the Asia Policy Group under the leadership of Doug Paal and hosted by the Deputy Prime Minister of Malaysia, Anwar Ibrahim. during this conference—attended by Senator KIT BOND, Senator BILL COHEN, and myself from the Congress—we had broad and stimulating discussions with government and business leaders from the ASEAN countries and the entire Pacific region. Some of those discussions included China, but the agenda was much broader than just China.

I have greatly benefited from these meetings and discussions with Deputy Prime Minister Anwar Ibrahim and the other leaders from throughout the region and with Doug Paal, who led our group. During my trip to Asia, I joined Senator DIANNE FEINSTEIN and Senator JOHN GLENN in China for a series of meetings with top Chinese leadership.

Mr. President, the growing importance of China in world affairs demands a purposeful, coherent, and consistent American policy toward China. History is littered with the uninformed and ineffective responses of an established power toward a rising power. Often the rising power suffered from its own ambitions seeking to accelerate its rise through military means. In modern history, we need only recall the pre-World War II rise of Germany and Japan and the former Soviet Union and the opportunities and mistakes our country and the free world made in coping with their rise.

History should teach us that established powers must provide consistent and credible signals about their expectations and set forth reasonable terms on which they are willing to incorporate the rising power into the international system.

We are now watching the rise of China—a development of at least equal historical significance and implication as the rise of Russia, Germany, and Japan. This is occurring with the important background of the rapid industrialization of Asia. Within 25 to 50 years, Mr. President, the lives of 3.5 billion people who live in the arc from Korea to India to Pakistan are being transformed. This development is as significant for humanity and for the citizens of our country as the Renaissance or the Industrial Revolution which transformed our people into the most productive, wealthy, and free people on Earth. At the center of Asia's rise is China, a nuclear power with the largest military forces in terms of manpower, in the world, and a permanent member of the U.N. Security Council. China is a nation with 1.2 billion people, an economy growing at nearly 10 percent a year for over the last decade, and as we too often forget—a distinctive civilization of great antiquity.

China is in the midst of four major transitions:

First, from a planned economy to a state-guided market economy.

Second, from rule by the Long March revolutionaries who established the Communist regime to a rule by bureaucrats, technocrats, and military professionals.

Third, from a rural agricultural society to an urban, industrial society.

Fourth, from a largely self-sufficient, largely isolated economy to one that is moving into the international economy and is increasingly dependent upon it.

Each of these alone is an enormous transformation. These transitions are occurring at varying speeds and with a scope unprecedented in history.

The process and outcome of China's transformations are unknown. Much about the Chinese future is unknown. What will the nature of the political system be a decade or a generation hence? Will the succession to Deng Xiaoping continue to be an orderly one? Will there be widespread social disorder? What about China's military? What will be its force structure a decade hence? How is its military doctrine likely to evolve as it acquires new weaponry? What are and will be China's foreign policy proclivities? Will the Communist Party remain in power? What are the chances for democratization in China? Can the Central Government remain in control or will China fragment or break apart, as we saw with the former Soviet Union? What would happen to its nuclear arsenal under such a situation? There is no consensus on the answers to these questions among the experts, either in or outside the Government.

The uncertainty about the Chinese future has several important implications. In light of China's growing importance, it is imperative that our country make a maximum effort to understand it. This entails ensuring that our Government has sufficient means to collect and analyze information about China, including extensive contact with Chinese leaders and bureaucrats at the national and provincial levels, and certainly people-to-people programs with the Chinese people themselves. President, our Nation must prepare itself intellectually for China's more extensive involvement in world affairs. This is absolutely essential.

It is difficult to conceive of the international community effectively addressing a number of pressing issues such as the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery, international terrorism, and narcotrafficking, environmental challenges, and the regulation of trade, without China's participation.

Because of the profound Chinese transition, American engagement is essential. We are not likely to significantly affect events over the short run, but—by engaging in dialog about our mutual interests and our grievances, by speaking in clear terms in this dialog; by participating in China's development; by greater military transparency between our countries; by helping to educate China's next generation of intellectuals, which we are doing by assisting it in alleviating some of its economic and institutional problems—its evolution is more likely to be in directions favorable to peace and stability in the Pacific as well as to American interests.

China's transition is likely to be protracted. The experts do agree on one point: Uncertainty is a permanent quality of modern China. Even were China to embark a process that we would call democratization, the development would be a lengthy one. History shows it takes a long time to create a legal system, guarantees for private property, a parliamentary system, a vigorous and free press, and the political culture that can sustain a pluralistic and tolerant civil society. As the American and British experience demonstrates and as we can now see in the former Soviet Union, that process takes decades. Not only must our expectations be realistic, but we cannot wait to engage extensively with China until it has become more like us or until it has settled down and its future is more certain.

Realistically, we must engage with China and its current leaders now rather than remaining aloof from this vast, complex, ancient, and proud civilization until it becomes to our liking. In short, China's transition and its potential impels America, insofar as possible, to be actors on the scene.

Mr. President, as I mentioned earlier, I visited China last month with Senators DIANNE FEINSTEIN and JOHN GLENN. We had an opportunity to meet with President Jiang Zemin, Executive Vice Premier Zhu Rongji, Minister of National Defense General Chi Haotian, Vice Foreign Minister Li Zhaoxing, and others within China's leadership. We had cordial, informative and frank discussions on a number of issues relating to the relationship between our two countries and stability in the entire region. Our discussions were greatly facilitated by Senator FEINSTEIN's longstanding friendship with President Jiang Zemin, a friendship that grew out of their being mayors of sister cities—San Francisco and Shanghai at the same time. They had many visits during that period.

In recent weeks, China has stepped up its military exercises in areas close to Taiwan. It has mobilized a large number of forces on the mainland across from Taiwan. There have been credible reports that China has provided nuclear technology to Pakistan in contravention of the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty and its solemn treaty obligations to over 150 state parties to the treaty. If those reports are verified, sanctions would be triggered automatically under U.S. law, unless they are waived by the President.

In recent months, China's behavior has raised concerns in Asia and in the United States. The concerns which have been expressed not only in this country, but also in Asia include:

China's military expenditures continue to rise along with its economy. It continues to test nuclear weapons despite the protests of its neighbors. It has made territorial claims far into the South China Sea. It has adopted an unyielding posture toward Hong Kong and has repeatedly threatened Taiwan. Its record on missile sales to Pakistan is troubling and in probable violation of its assurances to both the Bush and Clinton administrations that it would respect the missile technology control regime [MTCR] even though it is not a member. Its human rights record, including the sentencing of Wei Jingsheng, raises basic human rights concerns, affronting American sense of fairplay as well. And its inability to crack down on violations of trade agreements, including intellectual property violations, raise serious trade concerns. It is certainly possible that these developments which are troubling, are also harbingers of difficult relations between our Nation and China in the months to come.

But there are also developments on the other side of the ledger that are too often ignored. China has not obstructed U.N. and NATO peacekeeping operations and sanctions even though it openly doubted their appropriateness or efficiency. It has made important contributions to maintaining stability in Korea and in settling the Cambodian civil war. It continues to expand economic and cultural relations with Taiwan and, until 1995, it was regularly expanding people to people ties to Taiwan and reducing military tensions in the strait. It is in the process of opening itself to foreign direct investment and to wide-spread consumption of U.S. consumer goods in ways that go well beyond the opportunities many other Asian countries allow. It has announced the reduction of tariffs by 34 percent and plans further reductions to the average of developing countries in the region.

It has modified its social and cultural control over its people, so that its authoritarian government, while still harsh, has moved far from the reign of terror of the cultural revolution days. While far from acceptable by our present standards, by every conceivable measure, China's treatment of its own people in 1996 is far better than at the time of President Nixon's opening in 1972 and President Carter's normalization in 1979. In the last 10 years, an enormous number of Chinese people have moved from poverty to a decent standard of living. I will have more to say on the subject of human rights in China in the weeks ahead.

Mr. President, China has pledged to cease nuclear testing, but not before the negotiation and entry into effect of a comprehensive test ban treaty. It has played a quiet but positive role in assisting our quest—a very important quest—for a nuclear-free Korean Peninsula. In the Middle East, the Chinese have now developed ties with the moderate states, including Israel.

This combination of welcome and troublesome developments requires a United States policy that is carefully managed. Unfortunately, the U.S. Government, the executive branch, as well as Congress, currently have not developed such a policy toward the most populous and the most rapidly developing country on Earth. To allow this vacuum to continue would be both irresponsible and dangerous.

As we begin to think about a China policy, perhaps we should begin, not just with our litany of concerns about China, but also with some understanding of their concerns about us. China has its own list of grievances about the United States. Although I believe that most of these complaints are due to misperceptions and misunderstandings, we must be aware that if China's leaders conclude rightly or wrongly that the United States looks upon them as adversaries, they will respond in kind. We have a right to demand that the Chinese keep their agreements—we must also keep ours.

America is seen by many in China as attempting to isolate, divide, encircle, and contain China. They cite, among others, the following list of grievances:

First, delay on China's application for membership in the World Trade Organization which they believe is a violation of our 1992 bilateral agreement on market access.

Second, refusing to grant China permanent, unconditional, most favored nation treatment.

Third, constant U.S. criticism on human rights.

Fourth, preventing China from hosting the 2000 Summer Olympics.

Fifth, 1992 sale of F–16's to Taiwan.

Sixth, visits to Taipei of U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills in the Bush administration and Transportation Secretary Peña in the Clinton administration.

Seventh, visit of Taiwan's head of state to the United States, after being assured by top U.S. officials that the visit would not occur.

Beyond these frequently cited grievances, the leaders of China have several broader concerns about the United States. They are concerned that the United States wishes permanently to separate Taiwan from the mainland and perhaps to foster an independent Taiwan. They question whether the United States wishes them to be a full participant in the establishment of the post-cold-war order. They cite Washington's reluctance to see them as a member of the World Trade Organization or to invite them to join other groupings that formulate policy for the international community.

Perhaps most important, though these words are seldom spoken directly, with communism dead as an ideology and with no real democratic process conveying power and legitimacy, the Chinese leadership is vulnerable to nationalistic sentiment at home if they yield to what is seen as American pressure and demands. As a result, China is reluctant to undertake the responsibilities that the United States expects her to fulfill as an emerging great power.

We should not, however, underestimate American strength in Chinese eyes—economically, militarily, and ideologically. They understand and respect our military strength. They understand the importance of China's access to the American market. They admire our technology, and assuming a positive relationship, I believe the Chinese prefer buying from Americans over both Japanese and Europeans. I think we need to take that sentiment into account in our own trade posture and our own export posture.

Thoughtful Chinese know the United States is not seeking to contain China—I want to underscore that—but there are many in China who do not see it that way. We have welcomed over 40,000 Chinese students now enrolled in our universities. We are one of China's principal export markets. American businesses have invested $9.45 billion in China since 1978. We have welcomed Chinese participation in the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, and regional multilateral organizations. With our Government's encouragement hundreds of American foundations, philanthropic organizations, and education and research institutes now have wide-ranging exchanges with counterpart Chinese institutions. This is the record of a partner, not an adversary, in world affairs.

China would like to build a stronger military-to-military relationship, and though it does not say so openly, it understands the stability that the United States military force presence brings to Northeast Asia. I believe that with some notable exceptions, including Taiwan, the Chinese military is more open to warmer United States-China ties than some other elements of the Chinese leadership and these inclinations have been strengthened by the visit and the leadership of Secretary of Defense Bill Perry. Thus, America has many strengths in dealing with China, yet there are serious limits on our ability fully to utilize these strengths. We need to also understand that.

First, China is embedded in Asia, politically and economically, and the United States cannot pursue a successful policy toward China in isolation from the rest of the region. Our allies in Asia would not be prepared or willing to follow America's lead if we decided to isolate China nor are they willing to employ economic sanctions. Our friends in Europe and Japan will be most delighted to fill any Chinese need which develops if the United States employs economic sanctions.

America is still viewed in China and in Asia as a land of wealth and opportunity. But, in China and elsewhere in Asia, among even United States friends, many believe and privately say, that we are a declining power economically and culturally. The attraction of American society has eroded not only in China, but elsewhere in Asia, primarily, in my view, as a result of our own social ills, which are publicized all over the world. In Asia, as elsewhere, perceptions matter.

The Chinese see much that is attractive in the Asian model of development pursued by Japan, Korea, Taiwan, and Singapore.

The United States had a relationship with China that expanded and prospered from 1972 to 1989. We worked together in areas of common interest, exchanged views, tried to harmonize our views whenever we could, sought common policies, and sought to narrow and contain differences. Since 1989, we have been deferring discussion of common interests and emphasizing differences. To continue down this path is a prescription for posturing, animosity, brinkmanship, and danger.

Mr. President, our Nation must develop a purposeful, coherent and consistent American policy toward China and a strategy to implement our policy. We must also explain in clear terms to both our own citizens and to the Chinese the underlying rationale for our policy and our actions.

In the absence of a clear policy, it is inevitable that we in the Congress will chase off in separate directions with different priorities, while the executive branch lurches from one transitory issue to the next, addressing each problem in an ad hoc fashion. In the absence of an overall policy framework, policy becomes fragmented, the captive of single issue constituencies.

Those in the executive branch bear the primary responsibility for enunciating our policy, but as we see from Taiwan's President Li's visit to the United States, the actions of Congress often influence U.S. policy, for better or worse. United States policy towards China must be developed in close consultation with the congressional leadership of both parties.

In the immediate future, we should begin a dialog between China and the United States at all levels, including the highest levels—to discuss and where appropriate to act in unison in addressing these areas. Both the United States and China must get away from the current practice of diatribe and criticism. This dialog should not be portrayed as resolving our differences but rather beginning to find common ground and to reserving our different views for those issues that cannot be immediately resolved. Similarly, established channels for dialogue between Washington and Taipei must be utilized and strengthened so that there is a clear understanding of our respective views.

And may I remind my colleagues that 7 years have passed since an American President or Vice President has journeyed to Beijing or the President or Premier of China has been in Washington. During that time, the leaders of China have been to every major capital in the world, and the leaders of other major countries have visited Beijing on many occasions. Misunderstandings and misperceptions are bound to flourish in the absence of dialog. Meetings do not guarantee agreement. But they reduce the chance of conflict through miscalculation.

It would be irresponsible and dangerous for the United States and China to continue on our present course. It is time to end the period of estrangement between the United States and China. President Clinton's meeting in New York with President Jiang Zemin was a beginning down that road, and I hope we can greatly intensify those visits to the top level and, indeed, the working level.

This dialog can inspire mutual confidence and understanding, but only if we display an unambiguous willingness to be firm when China's leaders do not meet their responsibilities and commitments, as well as a meticulous management of our China policy to ensure that we adhere to our commitments.

Mr. President, I do not pretend today to offer a comprehensive China policy, but I do offer a few observations and suggestions.

First, the Clinton administration should develop a broader policy framework regarding United States-China relations and stability in Northeast Asia and a strategy to advance that policy.

Regarding this framework, I believe some of its components—and I am not pretending to name them all this morning—are clearly visible: a continued and robust American military presence in Asia is fundamental to the stability of Northeast Asia and peace in the region; and we should approach China in close coordination with Japan, Korea, and our Asian partners. We cannot pursue a successful China policy unless that policy is supported in the region. We must make clear that the cooperation we seek from our traditional allies and friends is not for the purpose of confronting or containing China, but for involving China more extensively and constructively in regional affairs. We should strengthen the linkages between China, the United States, and the rest of Asia so that China becomes firmly integrated with the United States in the emerging Pacific community. We must reverse a widespread perception that America's role in the region is in decline.

Second, we should make it clear that we are prepared to facilitate China's participation in the international economy and international security arrangements in the expectation that China will abide by the norms of those international regimes. The incorporation of China in the world community will entail some mutual adjustments, but China cannot expect to derive the benefits without bearing the burdens of its newly acquired status. China's admission to the various international institutions will be facilitated and accelerated if they are able to demonstrate a solid record of compliance with their international commitments, including trade agreements, the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty and the guidelines of the Missile Technology Control Regime, which they were not part of formulating, but they have agreed to the basic principles of it. In the nonproliferation arena, China should be involved in formulating the policies we expect them to abide by. Our strategy should be to welcome and incorporate China in the world community at a relatively early stage in its rise, with the explicit Chinese commitment to abide by international standards and to develop the domestic institutional capacity to do so.

This approach should serve not only America and international interests, but China's interests. Our strategy should be intended to elicit Chinese cooperation rather than to compel Chinese behavior.

Third, a framework with China must be based upon mutual dignity and mutual respect. We must seek to identify our important mutual interests and make progress in these areas while striving to ensure that our points of disagreement do not dominate every agenda. If we proceed in this fashion, the areas of disagreement are likely to be put into a broader perspective where progress can be made toward resolution over time. In spite of our recent disagreements, there are clearly crucial areas of strong mutual interests between the United States and China, including avoiding an arms race in Northeast Asia; avoiding confrontation on the Korean Peninsula and preventing a nuclear weapons buildup by either North or South Korea.

Also, avoiding the introduction of nuclear weapons in the Persian Gulf area; avoiding the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery; easing tensions in South Asia between India and Pakistan; maintaining stability in Northeast Asia and the general area of the Pacific; maintaining stability in Southeast Asia, including the emergence of a peaceful Vietnam and ending and healing the conflict in Cambodia.

Also, enhancing the efforts of the U.N. Security Council to maintain international peace and security; keeping sea lanes open for commerce; addressing transnational problems, such as illegal narcotics and terrorism; protecting the environment, including the seas; enhancing the rule of law in China; and, finally, maintaining the prosperity of Hong Kong and Taiwan. This is clearly in the interests of China, as well as the United States.

Our two nations will not always agree on how to address these interests, but we have enough mutuality to find significant areas of common approach and cooperation. Without this framework for the discussion of mutual interests, little progress is likely to be made on the issues where we differ. With this framework, I believe that progress can be made even in difficult areas of disagreement.

Finally, Congress should pass no laws or concurrent resolutions on China or Taiwan at least until after the elections in Taiwan which take place on March 23—in just a few weeks. I believe that Members of Congress should speak their views on these issues frankly and candidly, but in the present tense atmosphere congressional legislation or resolutions are likely to create more heat than light. I also hope that our China policy will not become a partisan political issue during the United States Presidential election campaign. Each time that has happened in past Presidential campaigns, our China policy has been the victim rather than the beneficiary of that kind of partisanship.

Mr. President, we have a number of important differences and misunderstandings with China which must be discussed firmly and frankly within our overall strategic framework. These issues include arms proliferation, trade disputes, and human rights concerns, which I will discuss in the coming weeks.

The most dangerous of these differences is the issue of Taiwan.

The Chinese leaders by their words and by their actions make it abundantly clear that any attempt by Taiwan to establish its independence from the mainland will result in a confrontation with the mainland. It is clear that the Chinese do not desire a military clash, but it is also clear that they believe that their national sovereignty and national pride are at stake on the question of Taiwan's future. Neither America nor Taiwan should take lightly this Chinese position. Beijing has drawn a firm line on this question.

It is essential that America also should make our policy and our intentions clear. The framework for American policy on Taiwan already exists in the three joint communiques under President Nixon in 1972, President Carter in 1979, and President Reagan in 1982 and the Taiwan Relations Act of 1979. The joint communiques establish that the Government of the People's Republic of China is the sole legal government of China, that there is but one China, that the United States acknowledges China's claim that Taiwan is part of China, and that the resolution of the Taiwan issue is a matter to be worked out peacefully by the two sides themselves. This is America's solemn agreement with China entered into by Presidents Nixon, Carter, and Reagan and followed as United States policy by Presidents Ford, Bush, and Clinton.

President Reagan stated our policy very clearly in his letters of April 5, 1982, to Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping and Premier Zhao Ziyang. In his letter to Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping, President Reagan stated "There is only one China. We will not permit the unofficial relations between the American people and the people of Taiwan to weaken our commitment to this principle." In his letter to Premier Zhao Ziyang, President Reagan stated, "The differences between us are rooted in the long-standing friendship between the American people and the Chinese people who live on Taiwan. We will welcome and support any peaceful resolution to the Taiwan question."

The Chinese should understand that the Taiwan Relations Act is the law of our land. This act, passed in 1979, underscores that America's relations with the People's Republic of China rest upon the expectation that the future of Taiwan will be determined by peaceful means; that we would consider any effort to determine the future of Taiwan by other than peaceful means, including by boycotts or embargoes, a threat to peace and security of the Western Pacific and of grave concern to the United States. This act also declared it to be our policy to provide Taiwan with arms of a defensive character; and to maintain the capability of the United States to resist any resort to force or other forms of coercion that would jeopardize the security, or the social or economic system, of the people of Taiwan.

This framework of the three communiques and the Taiwan Relations Act has served both sides of the Taiwan Strait as well as the United States and the Pacific region well for almost 17 years. For example, it made possible the relaxation of tensions in the strait which allowed trade and interaction of the two sides to take place.

It encouraged Taiwan to abolish martial law and become a prosperous democracy.

It made available to the Chinese on the mainland the talents and capital of the people on Taiwan.

It played a major role in the success of China's drive for modernization.

It produced a sense of security that allowed the emergence of critical conditions in which both Taiwan and the mainland could prosper.

Americans have applauded the building of economic and people-to-people ties across the strait. These ties have not just been between individuals and families but also between businesses and academic institutions. We have applauded the efforts of both sides to build on those ties toward an expanded relationship. Such an expanded relationship advances the realization of longstanding American hopes for the peaceful settlement of the dispute between the people on both sides of the Taiwan Strait.

A military confrontation between China and Taiwan would harm both China and Taiwan. It would have long-term consequences for Northeast Asia and the Pacific and would likely set off a serious arms race in Asia as Charles Freeman pointed out in his op-ed piece in the New York Times last week, a war in the Taiwan Strait "would not only threaten Taiwan's democracy but also finish any hopes of America's building a constructive relationship with China." And, in commenting upon a United States decision to either intervene or not do anything in the case of a war, he stated that "the results in either case would probably be Japanese rearmament, military rivalry between Tokyo and Beijing, a loss of confidence between Tokyo and Washington and alarm throughout Asia." And as Michel Oksenberg points out, while war is not the primary danger at this point, a protracted military confrontation could produce many of these same results. It would also disrupt the economies of China and Taiwan and would result in a tragic loss of life and property. Surely we all wish to avoid a repeat of Quemoy-Matsu tension, which lasted for a long time, to the detriment of the people on both the mainland and Taiwan.

Americans feel very close to the people of Taiwan. We are very proud of their accomplishments. The people of Taiwan have made enormous strides economically as well as politically. There are an example to much of the developing world.

It is important for the United States, as a friend, to be clear with the Taiwanese that they must not misjudge China on the question of Taiwan independence.

It is important that the people of Taiwan understand that a unilateral declaration of Taiwan's independence would be inconsistent with United States foreign policy as set forth and followed by President Nixon, President Ford, President Carter, President Reagan, President Bush, and President Clinton.

It is also important for the Chinese to understand that the United States values its friendship and its relationship with the people on Taiwan. It is crucial that the Chinese understand that if China uses force to resolve the Taiwan issue, the United States will not stand idly by but will surely respond.

For our part, the United States should make it very clear that we will oppose either side's attempt to change the status quo either by the use of force by Beijing or by unilateral declaration of independence by Taiwan. The United States position should be clear that we are prepared to live with any outcome negotiated in good faith between China and Taiwan. The future of Taiwan must be settled by mutual agreement between the parties, not by the unilateral actions of either. For that to happen, Taipei must stop its political provocations and Beijing must stop its military provocations.

The people of China and the people of Taiwan should resume a high-level dialog to foster clear understandings and increased cooperation. Enormous progress has been made in economic cooperation and people-to-people contacts as well as visits on both sides of the strait. While economic development and people-to-people cooperation are emphasized, political questions are complicated and emotional and their resolution will require a long-term effort. This will involve a trait for which the Chinese people are famous—patience.

I thank the Chair, and I thank my colleagues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DEWINE). The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BREAUX. Let me inquire of the Chair of the time situation. I know time is allotted to both sides. How much is remaining on this side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator from Louisiana that the minority has 19 minutes 54 seconds remaining.

Mr. BREAUX. I thank the Chair.

AMTRAK REAUTHORIZATION

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I take this time to comment on legislation that has been reported out of the Senate Commerce Committee reauthorizing the Amtrak rail system in this country and also instituting not just a reauthorization but as well an effort to try to bring about major reforms to the Amtrak passenger rail system in this country.

Let me say that the committee worked long and hard. The distinguished Presiding Officer is a member of the Senate Commerce Committee that worked on that legislation. It is apparent that I have expressed some public concerns about bringing this piece of legislation to the floor of the Senate under a unanimous consent arrangement to be handled in the Senate without the possibility of any amendments—indeed, without any discussion, just bring it up under a unanimous-consent procedure and then pass it and send it on to the other body, over to the House side. I have objected to that procedure because I think this, indeed, is a subject that needs to be discussed and debated in this Chamber.

Let me start by first saying that I very strongly support the concept of and the need for Amtrak reauthorization. The passenger rail system provides incredible economic assistance and transportation to industries and individuals in this country. Indeed, our entire rail system in this country is second to no other country. We can be proud of what Amtrak has brought in terms of passenger service to this country, as well as the freight and private carriers, and the good economic possibilities that they make happen every day by having this national transportation system of railroads in our country. All our industries and our businesses and our individual lives are touched every day by having such a fine rail system. I think by and large the various private companies do an outstanding job in maintaining their level of providing these services as well as doing their best to provide quality services in a safe manner so that everybody who uses the rail system can be assured of their safety.

The concern that I have—a concern we need to have this Senate body debate and discuss—is making sure that we do not do anything in this legislation to lessen the requirements of these private companies and, indeed, our public Amtrak system in the standards of safety that they must provide to the American public.

We all have witnessed this month a set of accidents around this country that I think are very disturbing, to say the least. Look at the headlines that have appeared in newspapers just in the month of February. February 2, 1996: "Two Killed, 20 Hurt in California Train Derailment." On February 10, this year: "Three Die in New Jersey Transit Commuter Train Wreck." February 16, again, this month, the third such incident: "Brake Failure Causes Yet Another Train Wreck—9 Workers Injured, FBI Called In To Probe." And, of course, one that we are very familiar with in this area, on February 17: "MARC-Amtrak Trains Collide Killing 12." And then the fifth such accident, on February 22: "Colorado Train Derails, 2 Killed, Acid Spills."

Mr. President, I say to all of our colleague who may be listening and to the American public that these five major train accidents that occurred in a 1-month period are disturbing to me, disturbing to my colleagues and, I think, indeed disturbing to the American public. They want to know that the trains they ride on, the trains that carry the goods and services of this Nation are safe, they can be counted on and that they are dependable.

Again, I will point out that I have a great deal of respect for all of these private companies. They are attempting to do a good job. The concern I have right now and the reason I objected to bringing the Amtrak reauthorization legislation to this body without the ability of any discussion, under a unanimous consent agreement that prevents any ability to offer amendments to that legislation, is because I think there is a real possibility that some would like to further restrict individuals' rights to be compensated when rail accidents occur. When you have five in 1 month, Mr. President, I think we need to look at how these railroads are operating, how we can help them do a better job, and, yes, at the same time make sure that people who are injured by accidents where negligence was the cause of that accident are adequately compensated, and, yes, even to the point of providing punitive damages when gross negligence occurs and is the proven cause of that particular accident.

Now, the reason I bring up these concerns to the Senate today is because of the provisions that are in the bill that has already passed the House of Representatives and what they attempt to do to the American public in the area of safety and the ability to be compensated. Two things leap out that I am very concerned about, and some of these features are in the Senate bill.

First, there is a cap on punitive damages in the House-passed bill. In other words, if a railroad is found to be grossly negligent, almost to the point of saying: "We don't care what happens. If you get hit, we will pay the damages; we don't care." And I am not saying anybody fits in that category. It is very rare that punitive damages are awarded. But when they are awarded, it is to say to the defendant who has been grossly negligent, "We are going to penalize you so you don't do it again. Do not think it is easier to pay the damages than to fix the problem."

The House bill puts a cap on the punitive damages that can be awarded instead of letting a jury or a judge determine, after seeing the facts, what it should be. The Senate bill has a similar provision that puts a cap on punitive damages as well; in other words, restricting how much someone can be penalized by a judge and a jury for causing an accident where gross negligence has been proven beyond a doubt.

That I think is simply wrong. We should not be moving in that direction. We should allow punitive damages to be assessed on those rare occasions when they need to be, as a form of saying to a corporation or an individual, "Do not do that again. If you do, you are going to be severely penalized." That is an incentive to do a better job. That is an incentive to make things safer. That is an incentive to do more inspections and to make sure things work the way the American public has come to depend on their working.

The second thing I am concerned about is that there is a cap in the House-passed bill on the Amtrak reauthorization on limiting how much a person can recover for pain and suffering in an injury from a rail accident. How do we in Congress, sitting in Washington, DC, where we have not been out to interview a family or not heard testimony of those who have lost a member of their family or been disfigured or lost the ability to have any income in the future because of the injuries, how do we in Washington pick a number and say this is the maximum amount they can receive for pain and suffering as a result of the negligence of someone that has injured them?

How can we in Washington, who have never seen the injured people, never heard their testimony in a trial, never viewed that testimony firsthand, pick a number and say this is a fair number in every case that ever happens in America? How many of us in this body or the other body have interviewed any of the people injured in five train wrecks all over the country just this month?

How can we say that x amount of money is a cap that can never be exceeded? That is not a function of the U.S. Senate. Those numbers and those amounts for pain and suffering, when someone is severely injured, can best be decided, I think, by juries and by courts and by judges who, in a public forum, have listened to the witnesses, seen their injuries, heard expert testimony about how bad they are injured. Maybe for the rest of their lives they are going to suffer those same injuries. Let them decide what is an adequate amount for compensation.

The third concern that I have, which is probably the biggest concern, is something that I just do not understand and, quite frankly, I think was a terrible mistake on the part of the other body when they passed this legislation. It is called indemnification. I will just read it and then I will attempt to try to explain it, because we write laws sometimes that nobody can ever understand unless they put it in English. Sometimes I think we write in foreign languages.

The House bill says:

INDEMNIFICATION OBLIGATIONS—

This is in title IV of the House-passed bill. It says:

> Obligations of any party, however arising, including obligations arising under leases or contracts or pursuant to orders of an administrative agency, to indemnify against damages or liability for personal injury, death, or damage to property described in subsection (a), incurred after the date of the enactment of Amtrak Reform and Privatization Act of 1995, shall be enforceable, notwithstanding any other statutory or common law or public policy, or the nature of the conduct giving rise to the damages or liability.

If you read that the first time, your eyes glaze over. Certainly mine do. And I say, "What did he say?" It sounds convoluted and like it was written by a lawyer. Yes, it probably was.

What that section that is in the House-passed bill simply says—and one of my biggest fears is that the Senate may agree to it in a conference—it says as simply as I can put it, if a private railroad that owns the track and owns the signals and has not kept them up, has completely ignored conditions or put in the wrong signals or has their own train that is running on their own tracks, when the engineer is grossly negligent, who is maybe intoxicated or under the influence of drugs, is running their train, that if all those things occur, and it runs into an Amtrak train and, heaven forbid, kills passengers on that Amtrak train, that this section specifically says that the private railroads can have an indemnification agreement that absolves them of any responsibility, absolves them of any liability no matter how negligent they were, and they can shift that liability to Amtrak and say that the American taxpayer, who happens to fund Amtrak, is going to have to pay for the damages, pay for pain and suffering, pay for the damages to the community, the damages that are caused by that wreck, even though it was completely and totally the fault of the private railroad.

I suggest to my colleagues that it is not good public policy to allow a private industry to shift the responsibility and the liability for their negligence, no matter how bad it is, their gross negligence, to shift that responsibility to somebody else—in this case the American taxpayer—that it is not right. It is not good public policy. In fact, it is very bad public policy.

Under that section of the House-passed bill, when we go to conference, if it were somehow to be incorporated into the final package and passed into law, every private railroad would say, "Look, I have much less of an incentive to do the right thing because if we have an accident that involves an Amtrak train," which many of these that I just cited have, "I'm not going to be responsible."

I just think it makes no sense whatsoever from the standpoint of any standard of public policy to say that we should allow indemnification agreements to allow someone to shift their responsibility, even when they are grossly negligent, to some other party and say, "You take it. You take my responsibility. You take my responsibility for the pain, for the damages that my negligence caused," and particularly in this case when it is the Federal taxpayer, because we in this authorization are funding Amtrak.

When we fund Amtrak, the taxpayers are paying for Amtrak. So why should the taxpayer be paying for the gross negligence of some private industry when it is their fault that the accident occurred? I think we have to look at this very carefully. We have to reject it if it comes back. It is not part of the Senate bill, but it is part of the House-passed bill, along with the caps on punitive damages, along with the caps on pain and suffering.

If there ever was a time when we should be more careful about protecting the rights of injured people and more careful about ensuring mechanisms in our laws that provide incentives and inducements for both public bodies and public railroads and private railroads to do a better job, now is the time.

I cannot imagine someone standing up on the floor at this critical time and suggesting that what we ought to do is make it harder and more difficult for people who are injured in rail accidents to be justly compensated. I cannot imagine anybody at this critical time coming to the floor of the House or the Senate and suggesting that private railroads should be able to shirk their legal responsibility for gross negligence, if and when it occurs, onto the backs of the American taxpayer instead of standing up and saying, "Yes, we were responsible. Yes, we have to pay. Yes, we are going to correct this problem."

That is the issue, as simply as I can possibly state it, that we are going to be facing when this legislation comes to the floor. That is the reason that I have said time and again, do not bring this to the floor under a unanimous-consent agreement. Do not tie the hands of Members of Congress in our ability to talk about this. Do not prevent us from being able to offer amendments to correct these problems so that we do not make a very serious mistake with this legislation when it comes to the floor.

We should have the opportunity to improve it, to correct it, to amend it. And if we can work out that type of structure, I am looking forward to the debate with my colleagues in the Senate and, ultimately, hopefully, in a conference with the House.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DORGAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, we are in morning business; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

POPULISM

Mr. DORGAN. There is an old axiom in politics, when your adversaries are having a healthy feud, never walk across the street and get involved in it. I will not do that this morning. I am tempted to. However, I wanted to discuss, at least a bit, the issue of populism. I will not discuss so much the details of the feud that is going on in the Republican Party and in the primaries, but I do want to talk about the issue of populism.

What propelled me to do that today was Time magazine. There is a picture of Pat Buchanan in a hard hat and work shirt, and Lamar Alexander peeking over his shoulder in his plaid shirt, and then Bob DOLE and Steve Forbes behind them.

It says, "Grand Old Populists." So I am presuming, I guess, that GOP means "Grand Old Populists." I wanted to talk a little about this issue of populism. It is a fascinating concept to see these, as one of my colleagues in the Senate calls them, Grey Poupon-eating-, Jacuzzi-, country-club folks, wearing hard hats and work shirts and calling themselves populists.

Let us put all this in perspective. About 80 or 90 million years ago, the brontosaurus and triceratops and tyrannosaurus rex were running across southwestern North Dakota. They are digging some of them up, by the way. Then we skipped and fast forwarded, and it was about 5,000 years ago that we discovered there were people around, and about 2,000 years ago Jesus was alive. About 500 years ago Columbus was relatively lost and stumbled onto the southern part of this continent, and despite the fact that the folks who were living here greeted his boat, he was credited with discovering something or another.

And 200 years ago our country was born. Then 100 years ago we created planes, trains, and automobiles, roughly speaking. And 75 and 50 years ago it was the radio, then television. And 25 years ago we put a man on the Moon. Then 10 years ago the computer became something that you could have in your home and then later carry on your lap as you traveled. And now in the Republican Party "GOP" means "Grand Old Populists." And it is causing quite a stir, actually.

I noticed in this morning's paper one of the strategists, William Kristol, who speaks more often than most on politics from the conservative side, spoke of this issue.

He is speaking now about the turmoil that is going on in the Republican primaries. "William Kristol," according to the story this morning as a result of something he wrote recently—I guess this week—"sees no need for the Republican Establishment to succumb, in Pat Buchanan's phrase, to 'terminal panic.' A junior member of that Establishment, Kristol doesn't cower when the high-riding presidential contender thunders about the terrified knights and barons of the GOP," et cetera, et cetera.

> "Someone needs to stand up and defend the Establishment," says Kristol, a sometime strategist, party ideologist and editor of the conservative Weekly Standard magazine. "In the last couple of weeks, there's been too much pseudo-populism, almost too much concern and attention for, quote, the people—that is, the people's will, their prejudices and their foolish opinions. And in a certain sense, we're all paying the price for that now . . . After all, we conservatives are on the side of the lords and the barons."

He says there is "almost too much concern and attention for the people * * * we are on the side of the lords and barons."

Well, what to make of this: The grand old populist with the hard hat and the honest conservative who says, "Wait a second, there's too much attention being paid to the people here, the people and their foolish opinions," Mr. Kristol says. "We are on the side of the lords and the barons."

God bless the lords and the barons. They are a good group of folks, but it is the people who run this country. It is the people for whom elections are held, because the Constitution gives the people in this country the right to grab the steering wheel and decide in Montana or North Dakota or Nevada or New York or Texas in which direction they want America to move. They nudge that steering wheel by collectively voting. It is the people, not the lords and barons, the people who grab the American steering wheel every even-numbered year. That is part of the miracle of the American Constitution. It is a miracle guaranteed every even-numbered year to the people in this country.

What of this issue of populism? It is interesting to me, coming from a State where populism had its roots. In North Dakota, in the early 1900's, nineteen teens, there was a legislator named Treadwill Twitchell who stood up in the chamber of the State legislature and told the farmers to "go home and slop your hogs with great arrogance." He was someone who represented one of the big cities in our State. "Go home and slop your hogs," he said.

They went home all right, and 2 years later, they organized section line by section line all across North Dakota. They came back and took over in North Dakota in the 19 teens. They were populists. There is a book written about it called "Prairie Fire," in which the people took hold and said, "This is our destiny."

They built themselves in North Dakota a bank saying, "We're tired of having public money put in private cronies' banks. We will have our own bank which belongs to people." My State is the only State in America that still has a Bank of North Dakota, and all public money goes into that bank used for the public good. It is not a case in our State where some of the State's money goes into some crony's bank someplace. It goes into the bank the populists created in the 19 teens.

They built a mill and elevator because they were sick and tired of the big mills in the East taking advantage of our farmers. They said, "We are going to build a mill and elevator." They passed a farmers bill where they said, "We want farmers, not corporations; we want yard lights where families live on the farm."

The populist legacy in our State is a legacy about people having power. Part of what I find heartening these days is the discussion in the political system, especially in the Republican primaries, but also in our party, the Democratic Party, a discussion about what kind of economic system does this country have. For whose benefit does it operate? Who reaps the rewards of this economic system?

There are some things I have heard and seen in recent weeks that trouble me greatly, and I am sure that is true of many in this Chamber: Top advisers to campaigners out there who give speeches to white supremacist groups and use code words. Those kinds of things really bother me a lot, because there is a dark tinge to some of this discussion, and that ought to be rejected, and rejected quickly, by the American people.

But there is also, in my judgment, an arrow headed straight to the center of what ought to be the economic debate in this country, and the center of the economic debate is how are American families doing? Are they advancing? Is their standard of living improving? When they sit down for dinner with the family to talk about their circumstance, are they able to say, "Our jobs are secure; we have good jobs with good incomes; we have decent health care at affordable prices; we go to good schools"? Are they able to say that? Or do they say, "Too often these days, we're not so sure about our job security. We worked for the same company for 22 years, but the company just reported record profits, the CEO makes $4 million, just got a $2 million raise and laid off 8,000 people, because they call that progress."

So, too many families now sit down at dinner and understand the companies they have worked for for 20 years see them like they see a wrench or a punch press: As a tool, perfectly expendable and completely expendable once the company has decided it is in their interest to decide to get rid of them now and hire another tool or another worker.

All too often in China, Malaysia, Indonesia, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, somewhere where they can hire someone without the restrictions on age—you can hire a kid if you wish—without the nettlesome restrictions that you have to pay a living wage—you can pay 14 cents an hour to someone who makes tennis shoes in Malaysia—without the restriction that you have to have a safe workplace, without the restriction that you cannot dump chemicals into the air or dump chemicals into the water.

So people now understand that they are expendable, and that is the sadness of the lack of security in the job place in America. Not only do they see they have less security, they also see that they make less money; they work harder, but they make less money. If one adjusts their wage for inflation and goes back 20 years and measures it, what has happened is they are working harder and 20 years later they are making less money and have less purchasing power than they had 20 years ago.

Is there any reason that the American people have some anxiety about that? We can talk forever that the GDP numbers are up, America is on the move, our economy is growing, and it does not matter if the standard of living for American families is not advancing.

I have spoken on the floor previously about this—I know it is repetitive—but it is important to say you do not and cannot measure America's economic health and its future promise by what it consumes. I am just flat sick and tired of hearing the news reports that the Commerce Department said this, the Federal Reserve Board this or that, car sales are up, home sales are up, shoes sales are up. At issue is not how much we bought, how much we consumed.

The issue is what did we produce in this country? It is production that gives you good jobs. Good jobs come from our productive sector and, as our manufacturing jobs are moving, we are losing manufacturing jobs. They are being moved by international economic enterprises who do not say the Pledge of Allegiance and they do not sing the national anthem. They are interested in international profits. They do not care whether they produce in Pittsburgh or Malaysia. They will produce where it is the most profitable to produce, and manufacturing jobs are leaving America in droves. Witness the trade deficit we have.

Last year, the trade deficit was larger than our budget deficit. There is nobody saying much about it, and it is almost a conspiracy of silence. The trade deficit means we buy from abroad more than we sell abroad. What that means is jobs that would have been here are instead somewhere else in another country.

Corporations that are producing are producing elsewhere, and the American people have some role in this as well. It is not unusual to find somebody wearing a Chinese shirt, slacks from Taiwan, shoes from Italy, shorts from Mexico, driving a Japanese car, and then saying, "Where on Earth have American jobs gone?" You are wearing where it has gone. So there is enough responsibility to go around.

But the center of the economic debate in this country has to come to this issue about what is fair trade and how do we construct a circumstance in which we have a healthy, vibrant growing manufacturing base in our country.

To those out on the campaign trail these days wearing hard hats and preaching populism, I say to them, "Come here and help us."

I offered an amendment in the U.S. Senate, and it was as simple as could be. No one could misunderstand it and no one could even, in my judgment, mistakenly vote wrong on it. I lost on a partisan vote.

The amendment very simply was to say: Let us stop providing tax breaks so that companies can close their American plants and open up plants overseas. Let us stop providing tax breaks so that American corporations can move their jobs to foreign countries. Let us put an end to the insidious giveaway in our Tax Code that allows companies to do that: Fire American workers, hire foreign workers, become more profitable, and destroy job security in our country.

I could not even get that adopted in the Senate. Mr. President, to all of those who voted and voted wrong, they are going to get a chance 6, 8, 10, 12 more times, if I have my way, this year to rectify that, because this country should not and cannot continue to have economic incentives in its tax laws to say "it is our aim to encourage you to move your jobs overseas."

It is my aim to encourage American companies to invest here, to produce here, and to hire here in this country.

There are twin responsibilities that we have. The American worker has a responsibility, but productivity is on the rise. Workers are working harder. Workers do have a responsibility to be motivated, educated, dedicated, and to be good workers. But companies then have the responsibility, as well, to care about the people who make up that company, to care about the people who make the products that the company sells with that company's name on it.

About a month or so ago, I read a piece in the Minneapolis Tribune as I was going through the airport. I came to the floor of the Senate and told, briefly, about what I had read because it was so foreign to everything that is going on in this country. It was about a fellow who had owned the company that make inline skates called Rollerblades. He and his wife had purchased this company and built it into something substantial, an enormously successful company, making inline skates. Rollerblades is the name of the company. And then this fellow, named Bob, sold the company some months ago. He had made a substantial amount of money because the company was enormously successful. Of course, all of us understand what has happened with inline skates. At Christmastime, some of the workers at this company began getting in the mail a letter from the fellow who had owned this company. They began to open their Christmas greeting from this fellow and his wife, and it turned out that he had sent them money. He no longer owned the company, but he sent all of the employees—I think something like 270 employees who worked for that company in the factory lines, custodial, the painters, and everything—if memory is correct, he sent them $160 for every month they worked for the company.

In some cases, those folks on the factory lines, who had been there all the time he had the company, got up to a $20,000 check from this fellow and his wife. Do you know what else he did? He prepaid the taxes on it. So he said to them, "This gift is for you. You owe no taxes on it. I have prepaid the taxes."

I called him and said, "This is remarkable, at a time when we hear about all of the selfishness and layoffs and moving jobs overseas. I want to tell you how remarkable it is to hear about what you did." What he said to me was perfectly understandable. He said, "I made money with that company because all of those folks helped make that company work. They worked on the factory lines. They are the ones who made the company, it was not just me, it was them as well, and I wanted to share something with them. I wanted to tell them that they contributed something significant in the success of that company."

I thought, "What a hero." He did not have to do that. We do not hear many stories like that—stories that are unselfish, where the CEO says, "You people really make this company work. When we put our company name on the product, we are proud because you helped make the product." That is almost unheard of these days. Nowadays it is, "Well, you worked for us, but tomorrow you are like a used wrench. You might be out of here with no security, no health care, and maybe no pension. We might be hiring your replacement 6,000 or 8,000 miles away."

Well, would it not be nice to hear more people do what that man did, and recognize that part of this country's success is to have a vibrant, expanding, growing manufacturing base, and to recognize the workers out there on the line producing products, doing good work, working hard, and are also part of the success and part of the competitive team?

I just think that we have kind of gone in a different direction in this country, in which we have had economists, CEO's, and others develop an economic model that says that it is fine if we produce elsewhere and sell here as long as we are buying cheap. That is not fine. Major jobs are gone, and a major future is gone with it. That needs to be the center of the economic debate. How could we create conditions in which manufacturing in this country expands again, in which there is fair international competition, in which we reduce the trade deficit, bring jobs back to this country, and rev up the American economy to a reasonable economic growth.

On a related but slightly different issue, yesterday, the President reappointed Alan Greenspan to head the Federal Reserve Board for another term. He is going to submit his name to us. Certainly, the Congress will accept that. I am terribly disappointed by that. I have great respect for Mr. Greenspan, but I have profound disagreements with him, as well. I agree with Jack Kemp on the issue of economic growth. The Federal Reserve Board sees itself as a set of human brake pads. That is their mission in life. They say America cannot have an unemployment limit below 6 percent because it is inflationary, or economic growth above 2.5 or 3 percent because it is inflationary. But wages are going down, not up, so that is nonsense.

When you consign our economy to a meager growth rate of 2.5 percent, you consign an economy to an anemic future that is far less than what it should be for all Americans. It means fewer jobs and less opportunity. I am very disappointed the President has seen fit—not that Mr. Greenspan is a bad person, I have great respect for him. But I would have much preferred new leadership at the Fed—not leadership that says inflation is not important because, of course, it is. We have seen stable prices and a growing economy. Inflation has been going down—under 3 percent for 4 years in a row. Yet, the Fed has its foot on the brakes with higher interest rates than the producers in this country should be paying.

Mr. President, I notice my friend from Nevada on the floor. He has some things to say today. So let me finish with a couple of other brief comments. This issue of populism, or the power that people have in this country to affect their lives and to force this political system to debate what it ought to debate, is a very important concept. We just finished debating a farm bill in the U.S. Senate. A fellow named Robert Greene, an Associated Press writer—somebody who I think does an excellent job of synthesizing what we do with foreign policy in the Congress. He wrote a piece that is probably the best piece I know of describing what we did on the farm policy. We passed the so-called freedom-to-farm bill, which I fought against and voted against because I think it is a terrible piece of legislation. Here is what he said about it:

> With a mix of luck, work and unusual organization, the lobby for the big grain companies, railroads, meat companies, millers and shippers scored a big win in the Senate-passed overhaul of farm programs.

The freedom-to-farm bill is a serious act of mislabeling. It is everything that big railroads wanted, that big grain trading farms wanted, that all the millers wanted, that all the food processors wanted. Guess what it means to the family with the yard light on at night trying to figure out how to operate the family farm? These large interests want lower grain prices. Talk about economic populism, about putting jam on the lower shelf so everybody can reach it. This sort of nonsense, the freedom-to-farm bill, which gives everything they want to the big grain trading firms, and shortchanges family farmers is the wrong way, not the right way, to address the issue of whether we should have family farmers in our future. If it becomes law, we will have large agrifactories from coast to coast, and you will see precious few yard lights on because family farmers will not be able to make a living.

I was going to talk about other economic issues that relate to the same thing—who gets, who gives, who has the power, and who does not. As Mr. Kristol says, "Who are the lords and barons, and what do they get?" I will end where I began with not so much surprise at the message, but at the candor in the article this morning where Mr. Kristol says, "Someone needs to stand up and defend the establishment. In the last couple of weeks there has been too much pseudo-populism, almost too much concern and attention for 'the people.'"

Mr. Kristol has not served in the House or the Senate, but the people control the House and the Senate. This is their Chamber; it is their body. They, by their election, determine who serves here. I guess maybe some people, who have not run for county sheriff or Congress, for that matter, probably sometimes dismiss the interests of the people.

There is a desk here that I was assigned to the first day I came to the Senate, and I have since been reassigned. It was temporary. I opened the drawer and, as is the custom, deep in the drawers, in the history of the Senate, everyone carves their names in the desk. That is not a practice we recommend to schoolchildren, but the history is that we do that. The desk that I was assigned to the first day I was here indicates that Harry Truman carved his name in the desk. A desk I was assigned to later says that Warren Harding sat in that desk. He later became President. Below his name is the name of one of the great populists in this country, Robert La Follette from Wisconsin. He understood about economic power. He understood about the people, and he would understand when I express enormous surprise that there is anyone who comments on, is interested in, or is involved in politics, who believes that there is too much concern and attention being paid to the people in our political campaigns.

Frankly, there is not enough concern and attention being paid to the center issues that affect people, who, every day, are trying to figure out how do we get a good education, how do we afford decent health care, how do we find a good job that pays well, how do we find a company to work for that will value and trust us and keep us and appreciate our work? Those are the center concerns of a lot of people in this country, who believe that over two centuries of growth, through innovation and through hard work, America has succeeded beyond the dreams of most when you look at two centuries; but who also believe that the best days in this country are still ahead of us, if its best days are consigned to the interests of the people in this country, who still have the opportunity to control its direction and still have the opportunity to tell us what they think is important and what they think will make America a better country in which to live.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. REID addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID] is recognized.

ACCENTUATING THE POSITIVE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, when I first came to the Senate, President Reagan surprised everybody in his State of the Union Message when he referred quite often to Presidents Roosevelt and Kennedy, using them as examples of good Government. President Bush followed. In his State of the Union Messages he constantly referred to the Democratic Presidents including, of course, Franklin Roosevelt and John Kennedy.

Mr. President, it appears in the primary battles that are going on in the Republican Party at this time to pick their nominee for the President of the United States they have been studying the Democrats probably a little too literally. It seems they have studied so hard that their primaries are now being conducted like ours used to be conducted. They are going to wind up, it appears, with their nominee chopped and beaten, I guess comparable to a McGovern or a Mondale.

Mr. President, the primary process that we have heard debated and watched debated has been one where there has been nothing but negativism. It is not what they can do. It is how much they can berate each other generally and the Government.

I think we should talk about how good things are rather than how bad things are, because I truly believe we are doing very well as a country. Now, when we say "doing well," that does not mean we do not have a long way to go; we have a long way to go to become better, but we are doing extremely well.

We need to improve, of course, on our immigration policies. There is a lot of improvement that can be made there. And the trade policy.

As an example, I did not vote for NAFTA; I did not vote for GATT, but I hope they work. I do not come in the Chamber and berate what is going on as a result of NAFTA and GATT. I hope they work. Even though I do not think it was right to pass NAFTA, I do not think it benefits me or my country to continually stand up and say how bad things are and it is all a direct result of NAFTA. I do not believe that is the case. I believe we have some problems with our trade. They are not all related to NAFTA and GATT.

We need to do better with crime fighting, especially, Mr. President, with juvenile crime.

Let us talk about how well we are doing. Last year was the third year in a row where we had a declining deficit. It did not decline enough each year, but it declined. For the first time in 40 years we had 3 years in a row with a declining deficit. We should talk about that. That is good. That does not take away from the fact that we should have a balanced budget. We can do that. But let us talk about what we have accomplished that has been positive.

New jobs, about 8 million new jobs in the last 3 years. That is good. Let us talk about it. That is important. Lowest inflation, lowest unemployment in well over 30 years. Economic growth has not been so high since the days of Kennedy and Johnson. Corporate profits have never been higher. A couple times in the history of this country they have been as high but never any higher.

We have heard speeches for years about how big Government is, but it was not until this administration that something was done about it. We now have 200,000 fewer civilian employees than we had 3 years ago. That is important, and that is good. We should talk about it. Government is smaller than it used to be. It is now at about the same level it was during the days of John Kennedy, even though the country has grown significantly. Consumer prices rose 2.5 percent last year, the second smallest increase in three decades. That is good. We should talk about it. It is important. Stock prices benefiting from strong corporate earnings growth and low long-term interest rates have risen almost 75 percent during the last 3 years. Good does not mean good enough, but let us talk. It is still good.

During the last 3 years, over 16,000 pages of obsolete regulations have been eliminated, part of Vice President GORE'S reinventing Government, and also as a result of Vice President GORE'S reinventing Government we have 200,000 fewer Government jobs than we had when he became Vice President. We have more new small businesses. A record number of new small businesses have been created since the start of this administration. Home ownership is at its highest level in 15 years. And also even though we can do better with trade, the United States beat Japan and every other county in the world in the last 2 years in the production of automobiles, the first time that has happened since the 1970's. That is good and we should talk about it.

Education. Fewer students are dropping out of high school. In fact, since 1991, the dropout rate has fallen by 16 percent. That is staggeringly good. Welfare rolls are down since March 1994 by 8 percent—not down enough. We still need welfare reform. It is broken and needs fixing, but let us talk about some of the good things that are happening in our country as we speak.

The misery index. The combined rate of unemployment and inflation is at its lowest levels since the 1960's. It sounds pretty good to me. And I wish those Presidential candidates would talk about that, would talk about how good things are in America today.

What the people running for President should be talking about, for example, is health care. Thousands and thousands of new people each month are saying, "I have no health insurance." Businesses more and more each day are saying, "We do not supply our employees health insurance." Health care costs are still skyrocketing. Health care costs this year alone will go up $1 billion. We need to have candidates talking about health care reform.

Minimum wage. We need to talk about raising the minimum wage. It is not a bunch of people, the stereotypical teenagers flipping hamburgers at McDonald's. The fact is that 60 percent of the people who receive the minimum wage are women. For 40 percent of those people, that is the only money they get for them and their family. The minimum wage needs to be increased. If it was good when we adopted it in the Depression years, it is good today and we should do what we can as a Congress to make sure it maintains its rate in keeping with inflation.

The environment. I have not heard a single candidate on the Republican ticket running for President talk about the environment. They are in that beautiful area of New Hampshire. I have never been to New Hampshire but the pictures are beautiful. I would love to go there and see that State. On television, you think of the pristine environment. We need to be talking about the environment. The only thing we have seen especially from the other body this past year is to roll back the environmental laws—22 riders on 1 appropriations bill to roll back environmental regulations. People in that body want to wipe out the Clean Water Act, the Clean Air Act, wipe out the endangered species law. They should be talking in a positive sense about what we can do to improve the environment.

I repeat. What I have talked about has been good. It does not mean it is good enough, but it means it is good. Let us give our constituents, let us give the people of America the positive spin. We are doing fine. Let us have these candidates talk about senior citizens and Medicare and not hear the nonsense that we are not cutting Medicare; we are only cutting the rate of increase, without leveling with the American people and saying, of course, we have to maintain an increase in funding for Medicare because thousands of new people are coming on the rolls every day. Medical costs are rising out of the roof. Of course, we have to increase spending for Medicare. It does not mean we do not need to do some work to make it a better system, but we need not decimate it. We do not need to have it wither on the vine as the leader in the other body says that it should.

Education, let us talk about education in a positive sense instead of what we are seeing happen this past year. We are seeing programs that I believe are good programs like School-to-Work—only 25 percent of the kids who graduate from high school graduate from college. What do we do about the other 75 percent? We have one way of helping. That is our School-To-Work Program which is a fine program that deals with that 75 percent and involves local businesses. In the State of Nevada, we have a wonderful School-to-Work Program. But what are they doing in the other body? They want to wipe it out, and in fact that is what we have. It has been wiped out.

What about our Goals 2000? In Nevada, we have set our Goals 2000. They are led by the First Lady of Nevada, Sandy Miller. About a month ago in Nevada they published their goals for the year 2000, good goals dealing with literacy, math education, reading, but it is being wiped out by this Congress. That is unfortunate. It is unfair to kids.

Crime. Crime is staggeringly bad in this country, but let us talk even there about the fact that the crime rate is declining with the number of murders reported dropping by 12 percent, robberies down 10 percent, car theft down 5 percent. As a result of the Brady bill, more than 45,000 fugitives and felons have been blocked from buying handguns. We have more cops on the street, about 30,000 across the country, over 150 in the State of Nevada. It has helped. Now, where we are failing—I have no problem discussing this—is with juvenile crime. It is becoming more violent, more vicious, and more random. We need to do something about that. But let us even talk on a positive note there about the President's State of the Union message where he said he was going to ask the head of the FBI to focus on juvenile crime, on gangs. That is important.

There is where the discussions should come. Let us talk positively. Let us talk about how well we are doing and how much better we can do.

Mr. President, there was an article recently by Daniel Gross that I assume ran in a number of different newspapers around the country. One of the things he said, and I quote, was:

> The wealthy would be well served to also recall that the three most dramatic investment events of this century—the panic of 1907 and the crashes of 1929 and 1987—all took place in the watch of Republican Chief Executives.
> The two worst Presidencies for stocks were those of Republicans Herbert Hoover, under whom the Dow fell an appalling 75 percent, and Richard Nixon. Between November 1968 and August 1974 the market fell 18 percent. Factor in the high inflation of the early 1970s, and the loss becomes a 6.9 percent annual rout.

Mr. President, I close by saying I think it is extremely important that the primaries, as they develop, be ones that the candidates focus more on the positive, talk about what is good that is happening in the country; and then on a positive note talk about how much better we can be, rather than the continual harangue we hear about how bad things are and how, in effect, the future looks bleak. I do not believe that. I think we are as good as our past. And our past has been good.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I observe the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

THE BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, at the close of business Thursday, February 22, the Federal debt stood at $4,987,959,914,205.44, about $13 billion shy of the $5 trillion mark, which the Federal debt will exceed in a few months.

On a per capita basis, every man, woman, and child in America owes $18,932.73 as his or her share of that debt.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is now closed.

THE LOST CREEK EXCHANGE ACT OF 1996

• Mr. BURNS. Madam President, today I am introducing the Lost Creek Land Exchange Act of 1996.

This bill would accomplish two important things. It authorizes the acquisition of the Lost Creek area for the public, and it may help prevent the closure of the Brand-S mill in Livingston MT.

I want to emphasize that this bill is a starting point. I fully anticipate major changes will need to be made. Yet, the process needs to move forward.

Under this bill, 14,500 acres of blue-ribbon bighorn sheep habitat known as Lost Creek would become a part of the Deerlodge National Forest. For the past few years, local sportsman and conservation groups, the Forest Service, and many others have been interested in the public acquiring this prime habitat. I, too, believe this is a worthwhile endeavor.

The bill I am introducing today would transfer the Lost Creek area, and 3,000 additional acres currently owned by R-Y Timber, to the Forest Service. In return R-Y Timber will acquire the deed to 3,600 acres and 46 million board feet of timber.

As most people in Park County know, R-Y Timber has an option to purchase the Brand-S mill in Livingston. If R-Y Timber decides to not purchase this mill by the middle of March, it is my understanding that the chances for the mill to remain open will be very slim. While R-Y Timber already has a mill in Townsend, this land exchange could allow R-Y Timber to keep both mills operating, and therefore, prevent the loss of 130 much-needed jobs in the Livingston area.

As I stated earlier, R-Y Timber will receive the deed to 46 million board feet of timber in the Deerlodge, Helena, and Lewis and Clark National Forests. However, the areas for harvesting have not been identified.

In addition, this timber will be harvested according to the Montana Forestry Best Management Practice, Montana streamside zone management law, and other State laws. Between 20 and 30 percent of the timber will be available each year, and R-Y Timber will have 5 years to complete the harvest.

Language has also been included to assure that designation of the timber will not slow down the present limitations on the numbers of trained Forest Service personnel. Under this bill, the Forest Service would be required to use outside contractors to perform whatever field work is necessary for the designation.

The Lost Creek area has been valued at about $8 million. And the days of the Federal Government simply paying the price tag are over. This bill provides a way for the public to purchase this prime bighorn sheep habitat while providing some timber jobs in our communities.

Madame President, as I stated earlier the bill I am introducing today is a starting point. We have much work ahead of us. Over the next couple months, I hope that the parties involved will continue to work together so this win-win bill can make it to the President's desk.•

By Mr. DEWINE (for himself and Mr. LUGAR):

S. 1572. A bill to amend title 23, United States Code, to provide funds and incentives for closures of rail-highway crossings, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

THE RAILROAD CROSSING SAFETY ACT OF 1996

• Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, today I introduce legislation that would make America's railroad crossings a lot safer.

According to the National Safety Council, over the past 4 years an average of 522 people have been killed each year in train-vehicle collisions. Last year, 37 of these deaths occurred in my own State of Ohio.

Almost 50 percent of these accidents occur at crossings that are already equipped with active warning devices. Simply adding more warning devices, therefore, is not a complete solution to this problem.

Some of these railroad crossings are just too dangerous. They are life threatening. They are not needed, and they ought to be closed.

We all know, however, that people get accustomed to taking certain routes. And communities get used to certain traffic patterns. That's why it's sometimes difficult for localities to close these crossings, even when it's clear on safety grounds that a particular crossing must be closed.

Clearly, the local communities need some help. That's the purpose of my legislation.

Currently, the Federal Government pays 90 percent of the cost of closing a rail-highway grade crossing. But other grade crossing safety projects—such as traffic signs, guardrails, and traffic lights—are eligible for 100 percent Federal funding.

The bill I am introducing today will make grade crossing closure projects eligible for that same 100-percent Federal funding. This will remove the current incentive against closure projects.

If the safest thing to do is close a crossing, localities should have an incentive to do that.

This bill does not involve new Federal money. The money for this bill is already allocated for crossing safety purposes—and all we are trying to do is deploy that money in the most rational and effective way.

My bill will also provide up to $7,500 to a local highway authority for each crossing closed. Furthermore, the railroad that is operating the crossing will match this money.

That means up to $15,000 for a local community—just to close a crossing.

Obviously, this is just the beginning of a many-pronged assault on a major safety problem. We can't close every single crossing that might be dangerous. So we want to make certain that the remaining railroad crossings are as safe as possible.

Last summer, I brought together Federal and State officials to see whether changes could be made to speed the process for dealing with unsafe railroad crossings.

Previously, the installation of safety lights and gates followed a linear process—one step had to be completed before another was allowed to begin. We created a new, streamlined process that allows officials to identify hazardous crossings and to implement expedited safety measures.

We eliminated the waiting periods between design, funding, and construction. The safety installation process used to take up to 2 years—but with this new, streamlined process, we are hoping it will only take about 12 months. This new process is being tried on 31 different sites throughout the State of Ohio.

It is a very promising approach, and if it works in Ohio, it deserves to be extended all over America.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1572

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Railroad Crossing Safety Act of 1996".

SEC. 2. FUNDS AND INCENTIVES FOR CLOSURES OF RAIL-HIGHWAY CROSSINGS.

(a) INCREASE IN FEDERAL SHARE OF CROSSING CLOSURES.—Section 120(c) of title 23, United States Code, is amended by inserting "rail-highway crossing closure," after "carpooling and vanpooling,".

(b) INCENTIVE PAYMENTS FOR AT-GRADE CROSSING CLOSURES.—Section 130 of such title is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(i) INCENTIVE PAYMENTS FOR AT-GRADE CROSSING CLOSURES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section and subject to paragraphs (2) and (3), a State may, from sums available to the State under this section, make incentive payments to local governments in the State upon the permanent closure by such governments of public at-grade railway-highway crossings under the jurisdiction of such governments.

"(2) INCENTIVE PAYMENTS BY RAILROADS.—A State may not make an incentive payment under paragraph (1) to a local government with respect to the closure of a crossing unless the railroad owning the tracks on which the crossing is located makes an incentive payment to the government with respect to the closure.

"(3) AMOUNT OF STATE PAYMENT.—The amount of the incentive payment payable to a local government by a State under paragraph (1) with respect to a crossing may not exceed the lesser of—

"(A) the amount of the incentive payment paid to the government with respect to the crossing by the railroad concerned under paragraph (2); or

"(B) $7,500.

"(4) USE OF STATE PAYMENTS.—A local government receiving an incentive payment from a State under paragraph (1) shall use the amount of the incentive payment for transportation safety improvements.".

SEC. 3. GUIDELINES FOR ANALYSIS OF COSTS AND BENEFITS OF NEW RAILWAY-HIGHWAY CROSSINGS.

Not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Transportation shall prescribe guidelines to assist the States in analyzing the costs and benefits to the public of new railway-highway grade crossings. The purpose of the guidelines is to encourage uniformity in the analysis of such costs and benefits by the States.•

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 1573. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to establish and provide a checkoff for a Breast and Prostate Cancer Research Fund, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

THE TAXPAYERS' CANCER RESEARCH FUNDING ACT OF 1996

• Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, breast and prostate cancer have taken a horrible toll on women and men throughout the world and we must make every effort to eradicate these pervasive diseases. Breast cancer is a deadly epidemic that strikes over 180,000 women each year. It will kill more than 44,000 women this year alone. Similarly, prostate cancer will strike an estimated 317,000 men, and will kill roughly 41,000 men this year. We cannot allow these appalling rates to continue unabated. We need to do something now. We need a cure and finding a cure takes money—a tremendous amount of money.

I rise today to introduce legislation to add another weapon to our arsenal in the fight against breast and prostate cancer. My bill will provide vital resources for the fight to eradicate this dire threat to the lives of women and men across our Nation. In addition, my bill will support our efforts to combat one of the leading cancer killers of men: prostate cancer. This is a very straightforward bill. This bill will augment existing Federal research funding by easily allowing taxpayers to get directly involved by contributing to a newly established fund expressly earmarked for breast and prostate cancer research.

On the Federal income tax return there currently exists a box that can be selected for Federal campaign contributions. My bill will amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 by establishing a similar box for a Federal breast and prostate cancer research fund. This will allow our citizens to cross swords with this dual scourge by simply placing a check in a box on their income tax return, as with the campaign contribution fund. One point needs to be made very clear—this is not an additional tax. This is a purely voluntary means by which concerned citizens may earmark a minor but vital portion of their Federal income tax payments expressly for breast and prostate cancer research.

Breast cancer is a truly horrible disease. Its incidence is rising at an alarming rate. In 1960, 1 out of every 14 women developed breast cancer in her lifetime. A few years ago it was 1 in 10. Now the figure is one in eight. We cannot allow this trend to continue. According to the National Cancer Institute's calculations, breast cancer comprises about 30 percent of all female cancers and it is estimated that the cost to the nation in the form of direct and indirect health care costs will exceed $16 billion annually. The NCI also says that reductions in breast cancer mortality will have a significant influence on these costs to the Nation.

Like breast cancer among women, prostate cancer is a leading killer of American men. According to the American Cancer Society, this dreaded disease is the second leading cause of cancer death in men. It is projected to take the lives of approximately 41,000 men in 1996 alone.

Congress has just begun to pay more attention to these terrible diseases by devoting increased funding for breast and prostate cancer research at the Federal level. We have made tremendous progress, but much more remains to be done. Given current budget constraints we need a mechanism to increase breast and prostate cancer funding every year from here on out.

Our current method of breast cancer treatment is not a cure. Today's treatments for breast cancer are very crude. We treat women with poison, radiation, and radical surgery with the hope that we will kill the cancer and not the woman. This is similar to dropping a tiny atom bomb. What we need is a smart bomb for breast cancer. Something which will specifically kill the breast cancer cells without causing destruction to the rest of the women's body and immune system. This can only be accomplished with an additional infusion of breast cancer research dollars. We also need to recruit more scientists and new ideas and innovations into this field. More money will jumpstart research but it must also cover the funding needs of research scientist and their programs.

I am personally determined to do everything I can to fight for the eradication of breast and prostate cancer. I hope to enlist the aid of my colleagues in the establishment of this Federal breast and prostate cancer research fund. Breast and prostate cancer can only be understood, and eventually conquered, through increased research We need a cure and we need one now. It is therefore critical that we all join together in this effort to help speed the discovery of a cure for these dreaded diseases.

Mr. President, I urge the adoption of this critical bill.•

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

THE 250TH ANNIVERSARY OF MERRIMACK, NH

• Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Merrimack, NH, on their 250th anniversary. On April 2, the 22,500 residents of Merrimack will begin a year-long birthday celebration encompassing numerous town activities to mark this historic occasion.

Very few towns in the United States can claim 250 years as part of their heritage. In 1746, King George II of England issued the town's first charter. During the Revolutionary War, Merrimack residents volunteered as some of the original Minute Men. The volunteers fought in the Battle of Bunker Hill in Charlestown, MA. Miraculously, only one Merrimack life was lost in this battle. Later, over 40 Merrimack men served heroically in the areas of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, West Point, Valley Forge, White Plains, and Fort Ticonderoga. The town of Merrimack paid their soldiers with Indian corn since money was scarce at that time. This is the sort of patriotism and commitment to freedom that Merrimack residents still embody today.

Commercial development in Merrimack began even before King George II issued the first charter. In 1656, John Cromwell established the first trading post. More settlers began arriving via the Merrimack River, from many surrounding areas. Other trading posts were established at ferry landings where stores were stocked with beeswax, molasses, flint, and powder, along with the best sellers of the day, rum and spirits.

In the early 1880's, rich deposits of clay were found in Merrimack allowing the town to create a thriving brickmaking industry. By 1846, there were 12 brickyards in town, employing 100 people. Many of the local buildings began using brick with granite foundation from nearby quarries in their construction. Brickmaking and river boating flourished until the railroad arrived in 1852.

In 1872, a cooperage shop at Reed's Ferry was established where English immigrants came to work. In 1897, other immigrants from Greece, Poland, and Slavic countries arrived to work in the many mills and factories being built.

Today, Merrimack is one of the thriving industrial towns just north of the Massachusetts border, housing many of New Hampshire's most prosperous manufacturers.

Over the years, Merrimack has had a number of famous residents; including Dr. Matthew Thornton whose signature appears on the Declaration of Independence. Among his numerous distinctions, Doctor Thornton was the surgeon of the New Hampshire Troop in 1745, was elected to the Continental Congress in December 1776, and served in the State senate from 1784 to 1786. In 1789, he purchased a large estate, and spent the rest of his 89 years in Merrimack. A monument to honor Matthew Thornton is displayed on the corner of route 3 and Greeley Street.

Today, Merrimack's population has grown to include 22,500 residents. The town boasts a dynamic business environment with a number of small to medium size businesses, many of which are family owned. In addition, Fortune 500 companies, particularly technology firms, dot the business landscape in Merrimack and are continuing to hire more and more residents each year. Merrimack residents are very politically active, attending town and school board meetings regularly. The local chamber of commerce and Rotary Club are also both very involved in local activities.

I wish the town of Merrimack a very happy 250th birthday. I share the pride of all New Hampshire citizens in the accomplishments and rich historic background of this wonderful town and its people. Congratulations Merrimack.•

FELIX ROHATYN'S WITHDRAWAL IS A LOSS FOR THE NATION

• Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I would like to share with my colleagues my deep sense of regret over the decision by Felix Rohatyn to withdraw his name from consideration as a nominee to the position of Vice Chairman of the Federal Reserve's Board of Governors.

My disappointment is based upon two factors: The first is that the Nation has lost an opportunity to benefit from the services of someone who not only has deep insights into the how the American economy functions, but someone who also has decades of practical economic experience both in the public and private sector.

Mr. Rohatyn is justifiably celebrated for his successful efforts that brought New York City from the edge of bankruptcy onto sound financial ground. He did so through a combination of public and private action that resulted in downsizing the Nation's fourth largest government, thus creating the foundation that has allowed New York City to achieve a balanced budget for every year for most of the past two decades.

Felix Rohatyn has also achieved great success in the private sector as the managing partner of the investment banking firm of Lazard Freres. Few people in the Nation can claim to have a better understanding of our capital markets and be able to back up those claims with the cold, hard proof of continued profitable returns for the company that he runs.

But it is the manner in which, and the basis upon which, Mr. Rohatyn was prompted to withdraw his candidacy for this important position that prompts me to take the floor today.

I fully respect—indeed, I encourage—the right of my colleagues to form and express their personal opinions about Presidential nominees. But that respect is diminished when that opposition takes a form that precludes a nominee from even getting a fair and open hearing before the Senate. That respect is diminished when instead of confronting a nominee during the hearing process and allowing that nominee to respond directly to his or her critics, leaked staff reports and innuendo are used to derail a nominee's chances.

But we must go beyond the manner in which these objections were raised to examine the objections themselves, for they portend a slavish devotion to an economic orthodoxy that is out of place in our system of Government.

I could understand active opposition to a nominee if he or she had been an advocate of Marxist economic thought or believed that isolationism was a cure for America's economic ills or was an advocate for some other discredited economic theory.

But it appears that Mr. Rohatyn simply failed to meet some arbitrary litmus test as to who is or isn't a strong advocate for ending "the era of big Government."

Mr. Rohatyn's sin? He proposed that the U.S. Government make investments in the infrastructure of the Nation. That radical thought places Mr. Rohatyn squarely in the camp of such noted American rebels as Daniel Webster, Henry Clay, Theodore Roosevelt, and most notorious of all, Dwight Eisenhower.

Mr. Rohatyn also has the heretical notion that it is possible for the American economy to grow, without risking inflation, at a faster rate than the puny 2.5 percent per year that some—I repeat, some—economists believe is the maximum safe rate of growth.

It is amazing to me that some of my colleagues can become so wedded to specific static numbers in the field of economics, as if the numbers themselves were some sort of Rosetta Stone that could unlock the secret of economic prosperity. Some people must believe that understanding the economy is as easy as calibrating the atomic clock or measuring the snowfall at National Airport. In fact it is the philosophy and methodology that underlies these otherwise meaningless statistics that is of critical importance. On that score, Felix Rohatyn is extremely well qualified to serve on the Federal Reserve Board.

The Federal Reserve is supposed to be an arena in which varying economic ideas can be debated, free from the constraints and pressures of the political arena. In that sense, it mirrors our greatest democratic institutions; if a diversity of opinion wasn't desired, there would be no need to have a Vice Chairman, or a Board of Governors. If monolithic thought were the intent, we would simply a single Director at the Federal Reserve, whose edicts would be carved onto marble tablets and then disseminated throughout the land.

Mr. President, Mr. Rohatyn's credentials are virtually unquestioned.

The chairman of the Senate Banking Committee recently stated that he thought the Mr. Rohatyn did "an excellent job in New York," referring to his rescue of that city from bankruptcy.

Mr. Rohatyn's colleagues on Wall Street said: "Most people on Wall Street have great respect for Rohatyn and his financial skills. He is a guy who is not at all soft on inflation, so [we] don't know where those rumors to the contrary came from."

The Financial Times said "there are not many U.S. bankers worth listening to. Rohatyn is the exception."

The Washington Post stated, in an editorial entitled, Playing Games with the Fed, that "* * * the elected branches in recent years have pretty well given up on the broad management of the economy. They mainly add to the problem, which is then left to the Fed to resolve. They ought not compound the burden they create by spreading to the Fed their own doctrinal quarrel."

Some may view the withdrawal of Mr. Rohatyn from consideration as a victory of sorts. But by depriving the Nation of the benefits of Felix Rohatyn's talents and by imposing an ideological straightjacket on Federal Reserve Board nominees, those who are rejoicing today may find that theirs is a Pyhrric victory indeed.•

TRIBUTE TO U.S.S. "GREENEVILLE"

• Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, on Friday, February 16, I traveled to Norfolk, VA, to deliver the keynote address at the commissioning of the U.S.S. Greeneville. This naval attack submarine, was named after the small city of Greeneville, TN, as a tribute to the rich history of the city and its citizens. I ask that my remarks at the commissioning be printed in the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

TRIBUTE TO THE U.S.S. "GREENEVILLE"

On behalf of the citizens of Greeneville—and indeed all the people of the great State of Tennessee—it is an honor to be with you on this proud day.

Standing here before this great warship—and the officers and crew who will guide her in defense of freedom—we are filled not only with pride in our Nation and our Navy, but also with confidence that we can and will meet any challenge that lies ahead.

It's been said that each new ship, as she leaves land to find her home in the sea, begins to form a personality that will be hers alone. A personality that encompasses the hopes and dreams of all who built her and all who sail in her. But her personality also takes on the spirit of those in whose honor she is named.

If that is so, the U.S.S. Greeneville will be imbued with the courage, pride, and patriotism epitomized by Greeneville, and by the thousands of other small towns across our great land whose people are the heart and soul of America.

She will carry with her the valor of Revolutionary War hero General Nathanael Greene, for whom Greeneville was named. The unflagging integrity of Greeneville's honored son President Andrew Johnson, who helped unite the country after the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. And the pluck of the great Greeneville frontiersman Davy Crockett, who blazed a trail into the wilderness and died defending the Alamo.

And she will carry the pride of every Greenevillian. From Mayor Love and all our elected officials; to the men and women of the Greeneville Metal Manufacturing Company, a subsidiary of the Newport News shipyards; Admiral Francis McCorckle, former commander of the battleship New Jersey and a resident of Greeneville for all of his 86 years; and so many others—who wrote letters, signed petitions, and lobbied Congress, the Navy, and anyone who would listen, to have this magnificent submarine bear its name.

While many today advocate a sharply diminished defense in the post-Cold War world, those of you who guard the frontiers of freedom know that the price of peace is eternal vigilance. And it is this vessel—the nuclear attack submarine—that leads the way. It is the sword point of our forward-deployed defenses—the first to respond to threats from potential aggressors, and the first to arrive in times of crisis.

Whether the mission calls for a continuous presence, as in the Caribbean off of Haiti; covert surveillance and reconnaissance, as in the Adriatic off Bosnia; or special operations forces, such as those we have maintained for years in the Korean theater; submarines provide critical direct and indirect support to our military forces, and are a mainstay of our strategic deterrence platform.

As General Nathanael Greene's colleague General George Washington put it, "There is nothing so likely to produce peace as to be well prepared to meet an enemy." Or as a more recent commentator put it, "Today the real test of power is not capacity to make war but capacity to prevent it."

That is why our military and civilian leaders must exercise their vigilance with foresight, with one eye always on the future. The price of unpreparedness is too high in American blood and treasure. We do well today to recall when the decision to build the U.S.S. Greeneville was first made, the current commander-in-chief was governor of Arkansas, and I was performing heart transplants in Nashville. And the Greeneville will continue to defend America into the next century, after both of us have returned to our home states.

While the Russians continue to produce and improve their submarine capabilities, and we face increased proliferation of submarine technology among many other nations, the United States continues to field the finest submarine force in the world.

And for that we owe a deep debt of gratitude to the skilled men and women of Newport News, who have built and maintained the subs that have kept us ahead of our adversaries. No nation on earth can match the quality and pride that shows in every weld, fitting, and watertight hatch.

We also owe a great debt to the submariners who patrol the icy depths of the world's waters in times of peace and in times of war. Their courage—and devotion to duty—are a model of sacrifice worthy of emulation and gratitude from all of us. Americans are a patriotic people who agree with the poet Homer when he writes: "He serves me most who serves his country best."

To every person who played a role in the fitting-out and commissioning of the U.S.S. Greeneville—Thank you.

To the officers and crew who will sail her into the uncharted waters of the future—Good luck and Godspeed. In every sea, on every mission, the spirit and prayers of the people of Greeneville will go with you.

They, too, can repeat with you the Midshipman's prayer of the Naval Academy: "Almighty God, whose way is in the sea, whose paths are in the great waters, whose command is over all and whose love never faileth: . . . Protect those in whose love I live. . . . Guide me with the light of truth and give me the strength to faithfully serve thee, now and always."

Finally, to all here today to watch the U.S.S. Greeneville come alive, God bless you, God bless Greeneville, and God bless America.•

TRIBUTE TO FREDERICK DOUGLASS AND THE TOWN OF HIGHLAND BEACH

• Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, today I join with the citizens of Highland Beach, MD, as they pay tribute to the memory of Frederick Douglass—one of Maryland's most celebrated native sons—by preserving his historic house as a museum. His house, facing the Chesapeake Bay, looks out onto the open sea and was a joyful reminder to Douglass of the freedom he so greatly treasured.

While Frederick Douglass was born in Talbot County, MD, and worked on the docks of Fells Point in Baltimore, he found peace and solace at his home in Highland Beach. Highland Beach was the first town to be established by African-Americans in the State of Maryland and was officially incorporated in 1922, although settlers had been living in the vicinity for decades. The house that is dedicated here today was designed by Douglass, but sadly, he never saw its completion. Instead his son fulfilled the task that was set forth by his father, ensuring that the second floor balcony that Douglass had dreamed of was erected so that, "as a free man, I could look across the bay to the land where I was born a slave."

The Frederick Douglass house was placed on the National Registry of Historic Places in 1992 after extensive renovations were completed. The house has also received the Orlando Rideout Prize for exceptional renovation in December 1995 by the Anne Arundel County Trust for Preservation. While these awards reflect the beauty and history of Douglass' home, that Frederick Douglass could own a home as a free man is the true monument. Douglass rightly believed that owning property was a very important economic accomplishment for African-Americans in the years following the Civil War.

It is, in my view, most fitting that the commemoration of one of Maryland's most noted African-Americans comes during Black History Month. Over the course of history, Maryland has been the home of many prominent African-Americans including writer Langston Hughes, actor and singer Paul Robeson, Washington Judge Robert Terrell, and educator and author Booker T. Washington; all of whom either visited or lived in Highland Beach.

Mr. President, as the Frederick Douglass house becomes a monument in the splendid community of Highland Beach, it provides an avenue for residents and visitors to share in its unique and distinguished past. I join the citizens of Anne Arundel County in demonstrating their pride in the history of Highland Beach and their expectation of continued success in the years ahead.•

COMMENDING DEBORAH WOELFLEIN AS THE 1996 NEW HAMPSHIRE TEACHER OF THE YEAR

• Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate Deborah K. Woelflein, an English teacher at Merrimack High School, on being named New Hampshire's 1996 National Teacher of the Year. As a former teacher myself, I commend her outstanding accomplishment and well-deserved honor.

Deborah, who is a Nashua resident, will spend the next year representing New Hampshire's teaching profession at various statewide and regional functions. As New Hampshire's Teacher of the Year, she will be considered for the National Teacher of the Year Award sponsored by the Council of Chief State School Officers and Scholastic, Inc. The National Teacher of the Year Program is the oldest and most prestigious honors program to focus public attention on excellence in teaching. New Hampshire's Commissioner of Education, Elizabeth Twomey, named Deborah the Teacher of the Year.

Among Deborah's numerous accomplishments as a teacher are several successful conferences she organized to draw together talented teachers to share their expertise with their colleagues. Timothy Mayes, principal at Merrimack High School, called her "one of our most respected faculty members."

New Hampshire has always been lucky to have many talented teachers, but Deborah Woelflein is certainly a role model among the teachers of the

Granite State. I am proud of her commitment to education and congratulate her distinguished achievement.•

THE FARM BILL—WETLAND RESTORATION

• Mr. LEAHY. Sections 357 and 358 of S. 1541 were included in an amendment to which we jointly agreed. Section 357 establishes flood water retention pilot projects under which farmers may receive incentives to restore land to fully functioning wetlands. The restoration of these wetlands will benefit their neighbors by reducing flooding.

Section 358 was included in the bill to ensure that when a farmer voluntarily restores a wetland on land now exempt from Swampbuster penalties, that land will not subsequently be considered a converted wetland under Swampbuster. Section 364 was then added because of concern that section 358 did not protect against abandonment related regulatory policies. The sections need to be rewritten to work correctly.

Would the Senator from Indiana agree that I have correctly described the history of these amendments?

Mr. LUGAR. I agree with my colleague about the history of these amendments.

Mr. LEAHY. It is important that these amendments be correctly drafted if they are included in the final bill. Would my colleague agree that we will work together in conference to develop a provision based on the following principle:

Swampbuster should operate in a manner that encourages voluntary restoration of wetlands. A farmer should not suffer a Swampbuster penalty if land he restores to a wetland later reverts to its prerestoration status. However, such a provision should be implemented in a fashion consistent with the wetland protection goals of Swampbuster.

Mr. LUGAR. I agree with my colleague and will work to rewrite this provision according to this principle in conference.•

THE UNIVERSITY OF NEW MEXICO OPENS AN ONLINE GATEWAY SITE TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE [GPO]

• Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize the collaborative efforts of the libraries of the University of New Mexico and the U.S. Government Printing Office to make important Federal Government documents more accessible to the public. On February 29, 1996, the University of New Mexico will officially open a gateway site that will allow online access to the U.S. Government Printing Office. This online feature will allow students, constituents, and the public equal and timely access to Government documents including the Federal Register, the Congressional Calendar, congressional bills, public laws, and the United States Code.

UNM has long been a leader in education and research in both New Mexico and our Nation. This initiative reaffirms the University of New Mexico's commitment to building and maintaining a world class research library. The university offers outstanding programs that promote the use of invaluable documents that are included in the GPO's data base.

The GPO has chosen UNM to be one of seven libraries in the country that will provide World Wide Web access to the GPO. With the Internet connection, individuals all over the world will have the opportunity to search and access some of the most important documents in our Nation. Built on an existing campus and a public network, this gateway depository will serve as a model to the electronic library depository system nationwide.

Mr. President, for its outstanding accomplishments, sincere interest in opening the information superhighway, and its outstanding service to New Mexico and our Nation in the area of education and technology, I would like to commend the University of New Mexico.•

COMMENDING GORHAM HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS FOR THEIR PARTICIPATION IN THE "WE THE PEOPLE . . . CITIZEN AND THE CONSTITUTION" PROGRAM

• Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I would like to commend 17 students from Gorham High School in Gorham, N.H. who were recently selected to compete in the national finals of the "We the People . . . Citizen and the Constitution" program to be held April 27 to 29 in Washington, DC. These high school students competed on the State level on January 29 for the opportunity to represent New Hampshire at the national competition, and will be among more than 1,200 students from 49 States and the District of Columbia to participate.

The distinguished members of the team representing New Hampshire are: Elizabeth Baker, Sarah Belanger, Mary Anne Bevin, Erika Clark, Amy Davis, Alexandria Dery, George Eichler, Kathy Fortin, Kevin Glines, Andrea Guay, Kari Horne, Kami Michaud, Chad Miller, Gina Piattoni, Amie Tanguay, Alicia Turner, and Jamie Washburn.

All 17 New Hampshire students will be tested on the Constitution and Bill of Rights before simulated congressional committees to demonstrate their knowledge of constitutional principles and their relevance to contemporary issues. The competition in Washington will consist of 2 days of hearings; and the 10 finalists, with the highest scores, will compete for the title of national winner on Capitol Hill in a congressional hearing room.

Michael Brosnan, a teacher at Gorham High School, also deserves special recognition for helping these students prepare for the intense constitutional testing. Raymond Kneeland, the District coordinator of the "We the People . . . Citizen and the Constitution" program, Holly Belson, the State coordinator, and Howard Zibel, of the New Hampshire Bar Association, all contributed a significant amount of time and effort to help the students reach the national finals. I applaud all of them on their commitment to enriching the lives of these students.

The "We the People . . . Citizen and the Constitution" program provides an excellent opportunity for students to gain an informed perspective about the history and principles of our Nation's constitutional government. I wish these young constitutional experts from Gorham High School and their teacher, Michael Brosnan, the best of luck in preparing for the April National finals. We are proud to have them representing New Hampshire, and wish them luck as they prepare to be America's leaders in the 21st century.•

(At the request of Mr. DORGAN, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD)

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

• Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise today to add my voice to those who have already spoken in recognition of February as Black History Month. Since 1926 this Nation has designated February as the month in which we honor the achievements and contributions of African-Americans to our history, our culture, and our future.

One could also say that February is the month in which we honor our Nation's unsung heroes—from the African-American soldiers who have often received no acknowledgement for fighting in the American Revolution to the African-American poets and authors often excluded from literary anthologies. The history of African-Americans is the history of what this country has come to mean to so many people around the world. It is the story of seemingly unsurmountable odds overcome and challenges yet to be faced. This year the President has asked us all to pay a special tribute to the achievements and contributions of black women who have risen above the twin burdens and racism and sexism.

Black History Month provides our Nation with an opportunity to reflect upon the progress which we have made as a nation in our struggle to promote the constitutional principles of liberty, equality, and justice. One black woman who contributed to the preservation of those principles was Barbara Jordan. I was honored to have served alongside Barbara Jordan in the Congress, and I recall very well her steadfast devotion to our Constitution. Barbara Jordan eloquently and with great faith articulated and lived the basic principles underlying our democratic government and society. I witnessed this dedication first-hand during our service on the House Judiciary Committee during the impeachment proceedings of former President Nixon. Barbara Jordan understood that our Constitution is a precious covenant and did her utmost to defend and uphold its promises to all of the citizens of the United States. With her recent passing, our Nation has lost one of the Constitution's great defenders, and I know that my colleagues will agree with me when I say that Barbara Jordan will be greatly missed.

Mr. President, my own State of Maryland has been blessed to be the birthplace and home of countless outstanding black Americans. Maryland was a bedrock of the underground railroad which helped many African-Americans find there way out of slavery to freedom. In fact, and Harriet Tubman, the African-American woman credited with leading more than 200 men, women, and children to freedom on the underground railroad, was a Marylander.

Born into slavery around 1821 on a Dorchester County plantation, Harriet Tubman escaped in 1849. However, instead of turning her back on those she had left behind, Harriet Tubman used her knowledge of Maryland's Eastern Shore to help other slaves escape to freedom. She was so successful that Maryland plantation owners placed a $40,000 price on her head, dead or alive. Although she is most often remembered for her work on the underground railroad, Harriet Tubman's service to this Nation continued throughout her life. During the Civil War, she served as a spy for the Union Army as well as a scout and a nurse. After the Civil War Harriet Tubman worked to resettle Negro war refugees, to establish the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, and on behalf of women's suffrage.

The history of Maryland is replete with the contributions of African-American women—many of which have gone undocumented and unrecognized. Black History Month affords all Americans an opportunity to honor our heroes both past and present, and to remind ourselves of the many national heroes whose faces do not adorn currency or postage stamps and whose stories are not told in history books or encyclopedias.

Mr. President, as we near the end of this month, I hope that each of us will take a moment to remember the lessons of Black History Month and to carry them with us throughout the year as a reminder of all that is truly possible. Two hundred years ago, how many Americans would have imagined a Barbara Jordan or an Alice Walker? Black History Month is a time to celebrate—to celebrate all of the great achievements of African-Americans, to celebrate how far this country has come, and to remind us of how much further we have to go.•

PAUL G. GOEBEL, JR.

• Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to mark the passing of Paul G. Goebel, Jr., insurance executive and longtime friend to the University of Michigan, Kent County Republicans, and the people of Michigan. Paul's life showed how hard work, honesty, and decency can still produce success in America, and how they also can produce a giving character and important good works.

After graduating from the University of Michigan in 1954, Paul served a 2-year hitch in the U.S. Army. On returning home he entered the insurance business. In the mid-1960's he began work with the Goebel-Hammon agency, which became the Paul Goebel Group in the mid 1980's. This successful agency provided coverage for professional associations and businesses. In 1994 he left the business in the capable hands of his daughter, Margaret.

Paul's activities were never limited to his business. He served as president of the University of Michigan Grand Rapids Alumni Club. As early as 1968 he received the Outstanding Young Man of the Year Award from the Grand Rapids Jaycees. He was appointed an honorary member of the United Way of Kent County in 1977 and served in a variety of capacities for that agency, including president.

An Ada Township resident, Paul also was a big supporter of the Republican cause in Kent County and in Michigan as a whole. The son of Paul G. Goebel, Sr., mayor of Grand Rapids during much of the 1950's, he also served as a Kent County commissioner from 1972 to 1974 and was once chairman of the county GOP. In 1974 he launched an unsuccessful bid to win back for the Republicans the seat once held by Gerald Ford. Disappointing as it was, however, this loss could hardly mar a life filled with friendship, family, and an active desire to serve the community.

Paul passed away on February 15, just a few weeks after being diagnosed with lung cancer. My thoughts go out to his family but, sad as I am at his passing, I also feel privileged to have known a man of his warm and giving character.•

CHARLES CAMPBELL'S SPEECH IN HONOR OF SENATOR RICHARD B. RUSSELL

• Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, on January 24, 1996, I joined many of our colleagues in honoring the late Senator Richard Brevard Russell of Georgia. Almost 25 years after the death of Senator Russell, hundreds of Russell family members, friends, and former colleagues dedicated a 7-foot marble statue of Senator Russell in the rotunda of the Senate Office Building which bears his name.

In the near future, our distinguished colleague, the Honorable ROBERT C. BYRD, will insert a transcript of the ceremony into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Today, I want to share with the Senate excerpts from a speech delivered last fall at the Governor's Mansion in Atlanta by Mr. Charles E. Campbell, president of the Richard B. Russell Foundation in Atlanta. I am grateful to Mr. William Jordan, my friend and a former senior staff assistant to Senator Russell, for making this text available to me.

Mr. President, I ask that excerpts of Mr. Campbell's speech be printed in the RECORD so that it may be part of the historical record of Senator Russell's distinguished career in public service.

The material follows:

REMARKS BY CHARLES E. CAMPBELL AT THE RUSSELL STATUE LUNCHEON, OCTOBER 23, 1995

Thank you, Governor Miller. First, I would like to express the appreciation of the Russell foundation to Governor Miller and Senator Nunn for hosting this luncheon today. Zell Miller and Sam Nunn have long been friends of Richard Russell and of the Russell Foundation.

I had the privilege of working for the last 6 years of Senator Russell's life as a member of his staff in Washington. Today, I have the honor to serve as Chairman of the Richard Russell Foundation. The Russell Foundation is a non-profit corporation established by admirers of Senator Russell in Georgia. It supports numerous activities related to the preservation of the Senator's memory, his records and discussion of public policy questions in which Senator Russell had a particular interest.

Next January will mark the 25th anniversary of Richard Russell's death. At that time, we will have an opportunity to participate in an event that will not only bring great credit to Senator Russell but to our State as well. I refer to the dedication of the Richard B. Russell Statue. The Russell Statue is a 7-foot marble statue that will be placed in the Rotunda area of the Russell Senate Office Building. The Russell Senate Office Building is the oldest and most prestigious of the three senate office buildings in Washington. In 1972—the year after Senator Russell died—the Congress, through joint resolution, renamed what had been known as the "Old Senate Office Building" as the "Richard B. Russell Senate Office Building." The Russell Senate Office Building is one of the most important buildings in our Nation's Capitol. It was there that such momentous events in the history of our country took place as the hearings to inquire into President Truman's dismissal of General Douglas McArthur during the Korean War (hearings which Senator Russell chaired incidentally), the announcement of John F. Kennedy's presidential campaign, the Senate Watergate hearings (of which Senator Talmadge was such an important part), and, more recently, the Clarence Thomas confirmation hearings.

The dedication of the Russell Statue at 4 p.m. on January 24, 1996 will focus on three distinct aspects of Senator Russell's Senate career: (1) Richard B. Russell—A President's Senator; (2) Richard B. Russell—A Senator's Senator and (3) Richard B. Russell—Georgia's Senator.

The President of the United States has been invited to speak on the first topic and, while he has made no final commitment, the initial indications are positive for his participation. Senator Robert Byrd, the former Majority Leader of the Senate, and Senator Robert Dole, the present Majority Leader of the Senate, have both agreed to speak on Richard B. Russell—a Senator's Senator. Our Governor will speak on the topic of "Richard B. Russell—Georgia's Senator." Senator Sam Nunn will serve as Master of Ceremonies.

Many of you in this room knew Richard Russell personally and many others of you know him by reputation. His career was one of the most outstanding in our Nation's history. He served 50 continuous years in public office. he served 10 years in the Georgia House of Representatives, including the last 4 as Speaker. He became Speaker of the Georgia House in 1926 before he was even 30 years of age. He became Georgia's youngest Governor in 1930 at age 32 during the depths of the great depression. The administration of Governor Russell was one of decisive change in our State—he cut the number of State agencies from 102 to 17 and cut the cost of Government by 20 percent. At the same time, there were numerous progressive achievements of the Russell administration including the creation of a unified system of higher education under a Board of Regents insulated from politics. That system survives today.

When a Senate seat became vacant in 1932, Governor Russell ran successfully and took office at the age of 34 on January 12, 1933. He was the Nation's youngest Senator.

Richard Russell served 38 years in the U.S. Senate, becoming the first person in the history of the United States to serve over half their life in the Senate. During this time, from 1933 through 1970—he never missed a single opening session of Congress. You might call him the Cal Ripken of the Senate.

Senator Russell's Senate career was perhaps unique in the history of our Country. No Senator, at least in modern times, has amassed the power and influence that Richard Russell enjoyed both in the Senate itself and at the White House.

When we refer to Richard Russell as a "President's Senator" we are referring to the fact that he enjoyed an extremely close relationship with every American President from Franklin Roosevelt through Richard Nixon and was a confidential advisor of every one of them.

Four of the Presidents with whom Senator Russell served—Harry Truman, John Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson and Richard Nixon—had previously served in the Senate where Richard Russell was the preeminent Senator. He knew them all well and they all knew before they arrived at the White House that Richard Russell was the foremost congressional authority on national security and a Senator who was good to his word in all matters. The other two Presidents—Franklin Roosevelt and Dwight Eisenhower—also had extensive prior relationships with Senator Russell. Franklin Roosevelt and Richard Russell became friends as young men when they were both serving as Governor of their States—Franklin Roosevelt in New York and Richard Russell here in Georgia.

In fact, at the 1932 Democratic National Convention, Richard Russell made a nominating speech for Franklin Roosevelt in the first of Roosevelt's four successful campaigns for the White House. Even though he was a new Senator at the time, Richard Russell had a significant leadership role in the Senate in passing New Deal farm legislation that created the Farmer's Home Administration, established farm price supports and soil conservation protection measures. During this time, he authored the National School Lunch Program.

Senator Russell, as a result of his position of influence on the Senate Armed Services Committee, dealt extensively with Dwight Eisenhower when General Eisenhower was the Supreme Allied Commander in World War II. They had become close friends before 1952 when General Eisenhower was elected President. Their friendship continued and grew during the Eisenhower Presidency.

One characteristic that was dominant in Senator Russell's relationship not only with Presidents but with everyone else was his staunch independence. No matter how close a friend he was of a President nor how much political pressure was brought to bear on him, he steadfastly refused to support any measure in which he did not personally believe. Probably the two Presidents who were the closest personally to Richard Russell were Franklin Roosevelt and Lyndon Johnson. However, in both instances, Richard Russell could not support important legislative matters pursued by them. He was one of four Senators to provide the decisive votes against President Roosevelt's efforts to pack the Supreme Court after it declared several of the New Deal programs unconstitutional. His independence also caused strains in his relationship with Lyndon Johnson 30 years later when he opposed certain provisions in the President's civil rights legislation, the social programs of the "Great Society" and the way in which the War in Vietnam was conducted.

In all things, Richard Russell remained true to his view of what was best for the Country.

If Senator Russell's friendship with Presidents was unusual, his standing in the Senate itself was perhaps unique. His power was such that he could have become Majority Leader or Minority Leader on any number of occasions. However, he declined because of his desire to maintain independence of thought and voting, making it impossible for him to agree in advance to support the program of any administration. Instead of becoming Majority or Minority Leader of the Senate, he largely selected several such leaders and became the Senate's mentor. Senators of both parties, of all political persuasions and from all parts of the country turned to Richard Russell more than anyone else for guidance and for help in the discharge of their Senate duties. They knew he was a man of integrity, independence and good faith.

Richard Russell was, in deed, a Senator's Senator.

He was also Georgia's Senator. Many times, it seems that one who achieves the position of national prominence and power as did Richard Russell, forgets his or her home state constituents because of the press of what are viewed as more important duties. Such was not the case with Richard Russell. Up until the very end, he considered among his most important duties that of faithfully representing the people of Georgia in Washington. He was fond of saying "I have been elected to represent and work for Georgia's interest in Washington and not Washington's interest in Georgia."

Georgians have benefited immensely and continue to benefit from Richard Russell's public service career. Benefits directly traceable to his representation of Georgia in the Senate include Lockheed—Georgia as a prime military contractor and a principal employer in this State, the National Communicable Disease Center here in Atlanta, the Richard Russell Federal Building that houses our federal court system, the numerous Corps of Engineers lake developments on Georgia's rivers, and too many outstanding military bases to even mention.

I relate two brief stories to illustrate the importance serving Georgia had to Richard Russell up until the very end. Several years before he died, Senator Russell became the President Pro Tempore of the Senate—which is in some ways roughly equivalent to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. As President Pro Tempore, he was the titular head of the Senate and third in line of succession to the Presidency. A part of the job as President Pro Tempore was to make appointments to various national commissions or boards where the President had an appointment, the Speaker of the House had an appointment and the President Pro Tempore of the Senate had an appointment.

After routinely approving recommended appointments for a couple of weeks, Senator Russell called me into his office one day and had on his desk a proposed appointment to a national commission. He asked me: "Isn't there anyone in Georgia qualified for any of these positions?" We got to looking around and found out that the particular appointment in question was in a discipline in which a professor at Georgia State University here in Atlanta was a nationally recognized expert. Senator Russell deleted the name of the recommended appointee and inserted the Georgia State professor instead. Amazingly, thereafter the names of qualified Georgians started appearing with greater frequency on the lists.

A second true story I would relate involves Senator Russell's decision regarding activities relating to his death. Before he died, he specified that his body was to be returned to Georgia immediately upon his death. This is because he wanted his body to lie in State at Georgia's Capitol here in Atlanta as opposed to in Washington. It is ironic that when the President's Senator and the Senator's Senator died, there were only three official activities marking his death in Washington: (1) The President of the United States ordered American flags to half staff; (2) the President paused in his State of the Union Address for a moment of silent prayer and (3) the hearse carrying Senator Russells' body was viewed by the entire Senate standing on the Capitol steps on its way to Andrews Air Force Base to be returned via Air Force One to Georgia.

Richard Russell, was, in deed, Georgia's Senator. The inscription selected by the Russell Foundation to be placed on the Russell Statue will read simply as follows:

"Richard B. Russell, Jr.—Senator from Georgia—1933–1971."•

ASTRONAUT RICHARD SEARFOSS

• Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate Astronaut Richard Searfoss, a Portsmouth, NH, native, who will pilot the space shuttle Atlantis, scheduled to leave Cape Canaveral, FL, in March. This is an exceptional honor for an astronaut, and everyone in his home State of New Hampshire is very proud of his accomplishment.

Richard attended Portsmouth High School and as a student scored a perfect 1,600 on his scholastic aptitude test. He was also the keynote speaker at the Portsmouth High School graduation ceremony for the class of 1994. Later, Richard on a National Science Foundation Fellowship in 1979 earned a master of science degree in aeronautics from the California Institute of Technology. The people of Portsmouth recognize Richard as an outstanding role model for all of his hard work and determination in becoming an exemplary astronaut.

Richard will pilot the 9-day Atlantis mission that will allow the five astronauts on board to hook up with the Russian space station, Mir, and drop off Astronaut Shannon Lucid. Shannon will spend 4 months aboard the manned space station, located about 200 nautical miles from Earth. Atlantis will dock at the space station for 5 days and then return to Earth with one of the three other astronauts who manned the station. The flight will also include a spacewalk.

This mission is not the first time Richard has been in space. As a test pilot in the October 1993 space mission, Richard was one of seven crew members to participate in a 2-week life sciences mission on the space shuttle Columbia. I had the opportunity to meet Richard in February 1994, and his commitment to the space program and to America was heartening.

New Hampshire is very proud of Richard's leadership in the NASA space program and wish him continued success in the future. We are honored to have him represent us in the final frontier.●

REMARKS OF FRED UPTON, GEORGE WASHINGTON WREATH-LAYING CEREMONY, WASHINGTON MONUMENT; FEBRUARY 22, 1996

As I dropped off Stephen, my 4 year-old, at pre-school this morning, I noticed that they are studying the former presidents—they had pictures of Bill Clinton, George Bush, Abe Lincoln, and George Washington on the wall. The teacher remarked that a student had said "yep, George Washington never told a lie, that's why they called him Honest Abe." Give them credit, they're learning.

It is an honor for me to be here today representing my colleagues in the House of Representatives, as we gather to remember George Washington, the father of our country.

Each year this nation sets aside one day, on the anniversary of his birth, to remember the man for whom this monument is built. It has been over 200 years since Washington laid down the cornerstones for this great land—freedom from oppression, personal liberty, a commitment to cooperation and hope, filled with opportunity and limitless growth.

We have come a long way since the boundaries of our nation barely peeked over the Shenandoah's—mountains that you can see from the top of Washington's Monument. Back when the West was untamed, when forest and prairie were all that stood between the colonies and the Pacific. We have grown and developed to lead the world with our strong economy and strong ideals, using the gifts that George Washington left us. We have won wars against tyrants, survived a Civil conflict of our own, liberated peoples across the globe, and created a system of government envied by most of the world.

Those of us that are left with the responsibility of administering this great nation that George Washington left in our hands could stand to learn some lessons from Washington's time.

His was an era of great accomplishment. A sense of community and a spirit of cooperation filled the land. A willingness to govern and to represent in every sense of the word.

George Washington, in his 1796 farewell address, urged our nation to put aside partisanship, urged its lawmakers to hang-up their divisions and to get to the task at hand of legislating. The lessons of this great man ring true today as our lawmakers, my colleagues beneath the dome only a mile away from Washington's Monument, have become entangled in partisan passions.

Calvin Coolidge said of Washington, "we can not yet estimate him. We can only indicate our reverence for him and thank the Divine Providence which sent him to serve and inspire his fellow men."

Allow him to inspire us, let this day of remembrance, let this Monument to his greatness serve as a daily reminder to us all, let him inspire us to set our differences aside and to be the true caretakers of this great nation that he crafted for us.

Thank you for allowing me to be here today.

REMARKS OF JAMES P. MORAN, AT THE WREATH-LAYING CEREMONY, COMMEMORATING PRESIDENT GEORGE WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1996

I am pleased to be here and thankful for the opportunity to share in this commemoration of our first President's birthday.

As a Northern Virginian, I am particularly fortunate to live in proximity to the monuments that marked George Washington's life. In Mount Vernon, we have his estate that overlooks the Potomac River. In Alexandria, we have the church where he worshipped and the city in which he conducted his daily affairs. In the nation's capital, we have the monument that stands like a beacon overlooking the city that bears his name.

George Washington, however, looked beyond the banks of the Potomac and ventured forth into the frontier. Like many of his time, he was driven by a passion for new discoveries and new lands. As a young man, he became a surveyor and was one of the principals of the Ohio Company which sought to conquer the Western frontier. But what distinguished George Washington from other landowners of his time is that he always heard the call of his country and always placed service to that country ahead of his personal desires.

When his England needed a soldier to lead the Virginia militia in the French and Indian Wars, George Washington became commander in chief of the Virginia militia. In 1774, when his colony needed a representative in the new Continental Congress, George Washington left his plantation to join the Continental Congress as a delegate. When the fledgling rebels needed a general to lead the Revolution and form those ragtag bands of militia men into a continental Army capable of fighting the world's most powerful country, George Washington became a hero. He led the soldiers of this new country through incredible victories and crushing defeats until he forced the surrender of Gen. Cornwallis on Oct. 19, 1781.

After winning at Yorktown and securing the independence proclaimed in 1776, George Washington again returned to Mount Vernon. His return, however, would prove to be short-lived for it became obvious to him that the new government of the United States could not meet the challenges of governing. So George Washington called together, and presided over, the second Constitutional Convention where his prestige and reputation were instrumental in leading to the adoption of the United States Constitution.

Immediately following the adoption of the Constitution, George Washington's country again needed his services and again he answered her call. At a time when he could have been king, George Washington became the first American President. As such, he established the standard from which all to come would follow.

George Washington was born in Virginia when it was only a colony of Great Britain. He lived in Virginia at a time when each state considered itself a sovereign nation independent unto itself. But George Washington was not only a colonist and a Virginian. He was an American and the embodiment of the principles, morals, and ideals that led to the creation, and success, of the United States. I am honored to have the opportunity to participate in this ceremony today.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

NATIONAL ENGINEERS WEEK

HON. ROBERT S. WALKER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, February 23, 1996

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, February 18 to 24 is designated as "National Engineers Week." This week is devoted to increasing the recognition of the contributions that engineering and technology make to the quality of our lives. During National Engineers Week, more than two dozen prominent engineers lead others in a variety of activities, from school visits to media forums.

National Engineers Week has been celebrated annually since 1951, and is always celebrated at the time of George Washington's birthday. This is a fitting tribute to our first President, who is also considered the Nation's first engineer. As President, Washington led a growing society toward technical advancements, invention, and education. Continuing that tradition in the Congress are the trained engineers we have in Senators JOHN GLENN and JOHN WARNER, Representatives ROSCOE BARTLETT, JOE BARTON, MICHAEL BILIRAKIS, BOB FILNER, JOHN HOSTETTLER, JAY KIM, WILLIAM LUTHER, L.F. PAYNE, JOE SKEEN, and Science Committee Ranking Minority Member GEORGE BROWN.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to note the significance of National Engineers Week to education. By taking this time to visit with students of all grade levels, engineers are able to demonstrate practical applications of math, science, and engineering and converse with students about the role of engineers. Such interaction with our Nation's youth is essential as we move into the next century.

As we conclude National Engineers Week, I would like to recognize the National Engineers Week Committee, a coalition of engineering societies, corporations, and government agencies. Their efforts have made this week a successful and productive one.

HONORING THE RETIREMENT OF DEPUTY INSPECTOR GENERAL, DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE, DEREK J. VANDER SCHAAF

HON. THOMAS M. DAVIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, February 23, 1996

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Deputy Inspector General Derek J. Vander Schaaf who is retiring on March 1, 1996, from the Department of Defense after more than 32 years of Government service. Mr. Vander Schaaf has been involved in Department of Defense management and operational matters for his entire career. He has an indepth knowledge of Department of Defense organizations and programs based on his three decades of Department of Defense-related work in the office of the inspector general, the Office of the Secretary of Defense, the U.S. House of Representatives Committee on Appropriations, and active duty in the U.S. Army.

Mr. Vander Schaaf attended the University of South Dakota, and in 1961, received a bachelor of arts degree in political science and business administration. He received a master of arts degree in public administration in 1963 from the University of Massachusetts. In 1993, Mr. Vander Schaaf received an honorary doctor of laws from the University of South Dakota. After graduation from the University of South Dakota he was commissioned as a second lieutenant in 1961 and served on active duty with the Army's 24th Infantry Division in Germany from September 1963 to May 1965.

After leaving military service, Mr. Vander Schaaf joined the Office of the Secretary of Defense in 1965 and was employed by the Office of the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense as a program analyst.

In May 1968, Mr. Vander Schaaf joined the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense, comptroller, where he was principally responsible for budgetary review of the military departments research, development, test and evaluation programs. After developing a reputation for budgetary and management expertise Mr. Vander Schaaf went to work with the House Committee on Appropriations as a senior staff adviser to the Subcommittee on Defense. During his tenure from 1972 to 1981, Mr. Vander Schaaf was principally involved in readiness issues, force deployments, logistics, medical, command and control, Reserve Force programs, and the Defense Department budget in general. During that time he authorized many reports for the committee dealing with overseas deployments, readiness, and the efficiency and effectiveness of Department of Defense operations.

In 1981, Mr. Vander Schaaf began his tenure as the deputy within the office of the inspector general and its predecessor, the Office of the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Review and Oversight. He played a vital role in the establishment and early development of the office and has been a key leader in all of the inspector general's major functions and activities, which include policy and oversight responsibilities for the Department of Defense's 18,000 auditors, investigators, inspectors. In the absence of an appointed inspector general, he has served as the acting inspector general for 5 of the last 9 years. He has earned wide respect from the private sector, his peers at the Department of Defense, and from Members of Congress for the professional and proactive role he has played in curbing fraud and abuse.

During Mr. Vander Schaaf's long distinguished career he has been the recipient of numerous awards and special recognitions including the Distinguished Federal Executive Award and the Meritorious Federal Executive Award. He is also a two-time recipient of the Defense Distinguished Civilian Service Award, the Department's highest civilian service award. Mr. Vander Schaaf has even found time during his busy professional career to serve his community as president of the Ravenwood Civic Association, where I first met him when I served as a member of the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors. He has been a model neighbor, civic leader, and friend.

Mr. Speaker, many of my colleagues have had the pleasure of working with Derek Vander Schaaf over the years and I know they join me in honoring him for his 32 years of public service congratulating him on a job well done and wish him and his wife, Karen, and their two children, Jill and Derek, Jr., continued success in the years ahead.

IRAN'S THREAT TO PERSIAN GULF'S SECURITY

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

Friday, February 23, 1996

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the American people a potentially ominous situation for a region of the world to which the United States attaches great importance. It has always been in the interests of the United States to promote a balance of power in the Middle East and the peaceful flow of oil in the Persian Gulf. Stability and security has always been in the interests of our allies in the region as well and for the last 50 years has generally been a high priority in the execution of American foreign policy.

However, the recent sale of advanced cruise missiles by the People's Republic of China [PRC] to Iran is a threat to that same stability and flies directly in the face of American nonproliferation efforts. I highlight this sale, and emphasize its possibly destabilizing effects, for my colleagues and all Americans for several reasons.

First, the sale of these weapons by China is a blatant violation of the Missile Technology Control Regime [MTCR], a global accord that was enacted in the hope of halting the spread of advanced missiles around the globe. With this recent weapons sale, China has clearly violated the agreement.

The repercussion of this sale in the region is undeniable. Iran's purchase of these weapons gives it the possibility of dramatically influencing, and potentially gaining control of, the gulf's important and lucrative shipping lanes—something Iran has sought for 17 years. There is no doubt that we must take this sale for what it is—an attempt by Iran to gain hegemony over the distribution of the region's valuable oil reserves. Iran's violent and aggressive recent past cannot allow us to be deceived into thinking that these weapons are to be used for any other but offensive purposes. This is pure and simple an offensive threat to both our, and the region's, commercial shipping industry.

Our interest in the region, and our past expense of resources to defend those interests, dictate the importance of not overlooking this recent action. We must ensure that the potential for any increased peaceful trade, due to the Middle East peace process, not be disrupted. We cannot allow the promise of a bright economic future for the Middle East and the Persian Gulf suffer at the hands of the despotic rulers in Iran. To counter that, I have recently cosponsored legislation that would deeply affect Iran's ability to do business and I strongly urge all my colleagues to do the same. These proposed economic sanctions will show that the United States has no intention of abandoning the gulf region to the terroristic whims of Iran's mullahs.

U.S. SENATOR ROBERT C. BYRD: MR. WEST VIRGINIA

HON. NICK J. RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, February 23, 1996

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, it was recently brought to my attention that a lot has happened over the last 50 years.

And you may well ask: Who doesn't know that? So something must have happened to bring that fact home to me, you are thinking. And you are right.

The fact that a lot has happened over the last 50 years was brought home to me in a most defining moment when our revered senior U.S. Senator from West Virginia, ROBERT C. BYRD, showed me a 50-year-old artifact of his long tenure as a public servant on behalf of the people of our great State.

Today, February 23, 1996, marks the half-century that has passed since ROBERT C. BYRD filed to run for his first public office, when he ran for the West Virginia House of Delegates.

Fifty years ago, on February 23, 1946, Senator BYRD paid the Raleigh County Circuit Clerk a fee of $10 for filing.

More awesome still, in the telling of this story, is—first of all—Senator BYRD still has that original $10 receipt No. 5333. The paper it is written on has yellowed with age and the passage of time that has made it as fragile as old parchment.

Second, after taking a closer look at that aging receipt, and given that at this time in our country's political history when fund raising for the big bucks necessary to win reelection has gone through the ceiling and into outer space, it was rather inspiring to note that the filing fee for public office 50 years ago was a whopping $10.

And finally, I noted that in that 50-year period, the fee for filing for office in West Virginia has gone up by only $23—to $33—reflecting an increase of only 46 cents per year for 50 years.

Senator ROBERT C. BYRD might say that this alone should encourage all public-spirited young men and women in West Virginia and in the Nation to run for public office; it says that at least, the filing fee is no obstacle to the desire to serve—and that ROBERT C. BYRD has a well-aged, 50 year-old receipt to prove it.

Mr. Speaker, Senator ROBERT C. BYRD is one of the finest men to ever serve in the U.S. Senate, indeed the finest to ever serve in both legislative bodies in the West Virginia Legislature, and who subsequently won a seat in the U.S. House of Representatives prior to beginning his service in the Senate in 1958.

When I am asked to pay tribute to Senator BYRD—there is often so much to say, and so much that needs to be said for history's sake, lest we ever forget this man's devotion to the people of his State, but I find words often are not enough to pay tribute to his tireless efforts on behalf of West Virginians.

I have often heard the Senator quote, from what I believe is the Book of Proverbs, saying: "Without vision, the people will perish." I, and all West Virginians are quite certain that, without Senator BYRD's innate wisdom and certainly his vision of the future throughout the half-century of service he has given us, West Virginia would not have become the bulwark, it now is for statewide business development opportunities and other economic development projects.

In a State such as ours, economic recovery is not as swift as it is for other States once economic growth and stability for the Nation is strengthening. We have to work harder to bring in new business and industry and to create new jobs.

With an eye toward bringing new industries and new jobs to West Virginia, and secure in the knowledge of our State's countless attributes such as a willing and able labor supply, plentiful natural resources, a growing State infrastructure, spectacular scenery, and a good, clean, crime-free living environment—Senator BYRD's vision is going to help bring West Virginia into the 21st century equally as well prepared as other States.

But Senator BYRD isn't just about a 50-year-old receipt for having filed for his first public office, nor about his more recent successful efforts to bring about the very effective business development opportunities in our State.

Senator BYRD has always known, and has always acted on the knowledge, that for a State to grow and to thrive depends upon an educated citizenry. Educating our children and youth has always been in the forefront of his grand vision for improving West Virginia. By ensuring an educated citizenry, Senator BYRD has brought to fruition not only his dream, but all of West Virginia's, of capitalizing on our State's many resources—both human and capital.

Senator BYRD has put his considerable influence and concern to work to ensure our ability to enter into the growing fields of health care services and delivery, the information highway, computer science and technology, infrastructure building, school improvement, and reform which includes his strong support for libraries and literacy programs, to name only a few.

His dedication to growth in the fledgling travel and tourism industry in our State which is known for its grand, breathtaking beauty amidst rugged mountainous terrain, and for its early historical influence, often after bloody encounters, in bringing about fair labor laws to serve its working men and women, especially in the coal mining industry, is well documented.

It is through these kinds of exemplary initiatives that Senator BYRD more than any other single individual, has helped assure West Virginia's entry into the technological world of the 21st century fully prepared and raring to go.

Today, I am pleased to salute ROBERT C. BYRD as Senator, as mentor, as a personal friend, and to wish him Godspeed as he labors in the vineyard of excellence in pursuit of an even stronger future for our State and its people. I know that as he has done in the past 50 years, Senator BYRD will today, kick off the next 50 years by continuing his work in ways that will give our people the natural dignity of a paycheck, the comfort of a job, the hope of parents for their children's future brought by education, the ability to find joy and pride in being a West Virginian, and the strength that comes from having a purpose in life and being prepared to meet all the challenges along the way.

Happy 50th anniversary, Senator BYRD.

SENATE—Monday, February 26, 1996

(Legislative day of Friday, February 23, 1996)

The Senate met at 3 p.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Our prayer today is George Washington's "Prayer for the United States of America," exactly as it is preserved in the chapel at Valley Forge.

"Almighty God: We make our earnest prayer that Thou wilt keep the United States in Thy holy protection; that Thou wilt incline the hearts of the citizens to cultivate a spirit of subordination and obedience to the government, and entertain a brotherly affection and love for one another and for their fellow citizens of the United States at large. And finally that Thou wilt most graciously be pleased to dispose us all to do justice, to love mercy, and to demean ourselves with that charity, humility, and pacific temper of mind which were the characteristics of the Divine Author of our blessed religion, and without a humble imitation of whose example in these things, we can never hope to be a happy Nation. Grant our supplication, we beseech Thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRIST). Under the order previously entered, the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. AKAKA] is recognized to read George Washington's farewell address.

Mr. AKAKA, at the rostrum, read the Farewell Address, as follows:

To the people of the United States.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those, out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you, at the same time, to do me the justice to be assured, that this resolution has not been taken, without strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that, in withdrawing the tender of service which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest; no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness; but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of, and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me, have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty, and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to the last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations, and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence, impelled me to abandon the idea.

I rejoice that the state of your concerns external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety; and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country, you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust, were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust, I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed towards the organization and administration of the government, the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset, of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience, in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and, every day, the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more, that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is to terminate the career of my political life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country, for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment, by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging—in situations in which not unfrequently, want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism,—the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts, and a guarantee of the plans, by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence—that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual—that the free constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained—that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue—that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these states, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation, and so prudent a use of this blessing, as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which cannot end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people, is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence; the support of your tranquility at home: your peace abroad; of your safety; of your prosperity; of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But, as it is easy to foresee that, from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth; as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed; it is of infinite movement, that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can, in any event, be abandoned; and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth, or choice, of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have, in a common cause, fought and triumphed together; the independence and liberty you possess, are the work of joint counsels, and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest.—Here, every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The north, in an unrestrained intercourse with the south, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter, great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise, and precious materials of manufacturing industry.—The south, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the north, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the north, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes, in different ways, to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength, to which itself is unequally adapted. The east, in a like intercourse with the west, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water, will more and more find a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad, or manufactures at home. The west derives from the east supplies requisite to its growth and comfort—and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions, to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the west can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength; or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While then every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined cannot fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts, greater strength, greater resource proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations; and, what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union, an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves, which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same government; which their own rivalship alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues, would stimulate and embitter.—Hence likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments, which under any form of government are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is, that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation if such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union, affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who, in any quarter, may endeavor to weaken its hands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union, it occurs as matter of serious concern, that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations,—northern and southern—Atlantic and western; whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts, is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You cannot shield yourself too much against the jealousies and heart burnings which spring from these misrepresentations: they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head: they have seen, in the negotiation by the executive, and in the unanimous ratification by the senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at the event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the general government and in the Atlantic states, unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties, that with Great Britain and that with Spain, which secure to them everything they could desire, in respect to our foreign relations, towards confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such they are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your Union, a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute; they must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances, in all times, have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay, by the adoption of a constitution of government, better calculated than your former, for an intimate union, and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government.—But the constitution which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power, and the right of the people to establish government, presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberations and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency.—They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enable to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reigns of government; destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Towards the preservation of your government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite, not only that you steadily discountenance irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretext. One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system; and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments, as of other human institutions:—that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country:—that facility in changes, upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion, exposes to perpetual change from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion: and remember, especially, that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours, a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of fraction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular references to the founding them on geographical discrimination. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind.—It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism.—But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result, gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual; and, sooner or later, the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purpose of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind, (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight) the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it in the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils, and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; forments occasional riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which finds a facilitated access to the government itself through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true; and in governments of a monarchial cast, patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose. And there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent it bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions of the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern: some of them in our country and under our own eyes.—To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the constitution designates.—But let there be no change by usurpation; for through this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil, any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? and let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect, that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true, that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed, extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric?

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering, also, that timely disbursements, to prepare for danger, frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions, in time of peace, to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should co-operate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is essential that you should practically bear in mind, that towards the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper object (which is always a choice of difficulties), ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue, which the public exigencies may at any time debate.

Observe good faith and justice towards all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct, and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt but, in the course of time and things, the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it; can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan, nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachment for others, should be excluded; and that, in place of them, just and amicable feelings towards all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges towards another an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity, or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another, disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times, it makes the animosity of the nation's subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty of nations, has been the victim.

So likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducements or justifications. It leads also to concessions, to the favorite nation, or privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions, by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealously, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gilding with the appearances of virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils!—Such an attachment of a small or weak, towards a great and powerful nation, dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, (I conjure you to believe me fellow citizens,) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake; since history and experience prove, that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealously, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another, cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith:—Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon, to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation, when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion, it is unnecessary, and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, and a liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary, and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view, that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that is must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance, it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect, or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish; that they will control the usual current of the passions, or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations, but if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism; this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far, in the discharge of my official duties, I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is, that I have, at least, believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe, my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both houses of congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound, in duty and interest, to take a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct, it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without any thing more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity towards other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me, a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress, without interruption, to that degree of strength, and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration, I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence; and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service, with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love towards it, which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations; I anticipate with pleasing expectation that in which I promise myself to realize, without alloy, the sweet enjoyment of partaking, in the midst of my fellow citizens, the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors and dangers.

UNITED STATES,

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Thomas, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

REPORT CONCERNING THE COUNCIL OF ECONOMIC ADVISERS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING RECESS—PM 123

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 4, 1995, the Secretary of the Senate, on February 14, 1996, during the recess of the Senate, received the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Joint Economic Committee.

To the Congress of the United States:

Fifty years ago, the Congress passed and President Truman signed the Employment Act of 1946, which committed the U.S. Government to promote policies designed to create employment opportunities for all Americans. I am proud that my Administration has made President Truman's commitment a reality. Over the past 3 years, we have created a sound economic foundation to face the challenges of the 21st century.

STRONG ECONOMIC PERFORMANCE

Overall, the American economy is healthy and strong. In the first 3 years of this Administration nearly 8 million jobs were created; 93 percent of them in the private sector. The so-called "misery index"—the sum of the inflation and unemployment rates—fell last year to its lowest level since 1968. Investment has soared, laying the basis for future higher economic growth. New business incorporations have set a record and exports of American-made goods have grown rapidly. Our is the strongest and most competitive economy in the world—and its fundamentals are as sound as they have been in three decades.

This turnaround occurred because of the hard work and ingenuity of the American people. Many of the new jobs are high-wage service sector jobs—reflecting the changing structure of the economy. The telecommunications, biotechnology, and software industries have led the high-tech revolution world-wide. Traditional industries, such as manufacturing and construction, have restructured and now use technology and workplace innovation to thrive and once again create jobs. For example, in 1994 and 1995, America was once again the world's largest automobile maker.

Our 1993 economic plan set the stage for this economic expansion and resurgence, by enacting historic deficit reduction while continuing to invest in technology and education. For over a decade, growing Federal budget deficits kept interest rates high and dampened reinvestment and productivity growth. Now, our deficit is proportionately the lowest of any major economy.

Today, our challenge is to ensure that all Americans can become winners in economic change—that our people have the skills and the security to make the most of their own lives. The very explosion of technology and trade that creates such extraordinary opportunity also places new pressures on working people. Over the past two decades, middle-class earnings have stagnated, and our poorest families saw their incomes fall. These are long-run trends, and 3 years of sound economic policies cannot correct for a decade of neglect. Even so, we are beginning to make some progress: real median family income increased by 2.3 percent in 1994, and the poverty rate fell in 1994 for the first time in 5 years.

ADDRESSING OUR ECONOMIC CHALLENGES

I am firmly committed to addressing our economic challenges and enhancing economic security for all Americans. People who work hard need to know that they can and will have a chance to win in our new and changing economy. Our economic agenda seeks both to promote growth and to bring the fruits of that growth within reach of all Americans. Our overall strategy is straightforward:

—Balancing the budget. In the 12 years before I took office, the budget deficit skyrocketed and the national debt quadrupled. My Administration has already cut the budget deficit nearly in half. I am determined to finish the job of putting our fiscal house in order. I have proposed a plan that balances the budget in 7 years, without violating our fundamental values—without undercutting Medicare, Medicaid, education, or the environment and without raising taxes on working families. The plans put forth by my Administration and by the Republicans in the Congress contain enough spending cuts in common to balance the budget and still provide a modest tax cut. I am committed to giving the American people a balanced budget.

—Preparing workers through education and training. In the new economy, education is the key to opportunity—and the education obtained as a child in school will no longer last a lifetime. My Administration has put in place the elements of a lifetime-learning system to enable Americans to attend schools with high standards; get help going to college, or from school into the workplace; and receive training and education throughout their careers. We expanded Head Start for preschoolers; enacted Goals 2000, establishing high standards for schools; created a new direct student loan program that makes it easier for young people to borrow and repay college loans; gave 50,000 young people the opportunity to earn college tuition through community service; and enacted the School-to-Work Opportunities Act. Now we must continue to give our people the skills they need, by enacting my proposals to make the first $10,000 of college tuition tax deductible; to give the top 5 percent of students in each high school a $1,000 merit scholarship; and to enact the GI Bill for Workers, which would replace the existing worker training system with a flexible voucher that workers could use at community colleges or other training facilities.

—Increasing economic security. We must give Americans the security then need to thrive in the new economy. We can do this through health insurance reforms that will give Americans a chance to buy insurance when they change jobs or when someone in their family is sick. We can do this by encouraging firms to provide more extensive pension coverage, as I have done through my proposals for pension simplification. In addition, we should make work pay by increasing the minimum wage and preserving the full Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC), which cuts taxes for hard-pressed working families to make sure that no parents who work full-time have to raise their children in poverty.

—Creating high-wage jobs through technology and exports. We must continue to encourage the growth of high-wage industries, which will create the high-wage jobs of the future. We have reformed the decades-old telecommunications laws, to help spur the digital revolution that will continue to transform the way we live. We must continue to encourage exports, since jobs supported by goods exports pay on average 13 percent more than other jobs. My Administration has concluded over 200 trade agreements, including the North American Free Trade Agreement and the Uruguay Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, seeking an open world marketplace and fair rules for exporters of American goods and services. As a result, merchandise exports have increased by 31 percent.

—A government that is smaller, works better, and costs less. A new economy demands a new kind of government. The era of big, centralized, one-size-fits-all government is over. But the answer is not the wholesale dismantling of government. Rather, we must strive to meet our problems using flexible, non-bureaucratic means—and working with businesses, religious groups, civic organizations, schools, and State and local governments. My Administration has reduced the size of government: as a percentage of civilian nonfarm employment, the Federal workforce is the smallest it has been since 1933, before the New Deal. We have conducted a top-to-bottom overhaul of Federal regulations, and are eliminating 16,000 pages of outdated or burdensome rules altogether. We have reformed environmental, workplace safety, and pharmaceutical regulations to cut red tape without hurting public protection. And we will continue to find new, market-based ways to protect the public.

THE NEED TO CONTINUE WITH WHAT WORKS

As The Annual Report of the Council of Economic Advisers makes clear, this is a moment of great possibility for our country. Ours is the healthiest of any major economy. No nation on earth is better positioned to reap the rewards of the new era. Our strategy of deficit reduction and investment in our people has begun to work. It would be a grave error to turn back.

Our Nation must reject the temptation to shrink from its responsibilities or to turn to narrow, shortsighted solutions for long-term problems. If we continue to invest for the long term, we will pass on to the next generation a Nation in which opportunity is even more plentiful than it is today.

WILLIAM J. CLINTON.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

COMMEMORATING THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF PORTLAND STATE UNIVERSITY

• Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, this year marks the 50th anniversary of Portland State University [PSU], Oregon's urban university. In its short life, the university has evolved into a national model for how higher education can be integrated into urban communities through service learning directed at taking on thorny urban problems. What this means is that instead of just focusing on ethereal academic concepts, PSU staff and students roll up their sleeves and connect concepts with community, and knowledge of an academic subject with real world applications.

In 1946, Portland State University began as an extension school to serve returning World War II veterans. Today, the university serves more than 37,000 individuals every year, offering a wide range of undergraduate and graduate degree programs. What's more, since its extension school days, PSU's mission has shifted to showing how town and gown can work together to build the communities of the future.

When innovative community programs in the Portland metropolitan area are brought to my attention, often I find that PSU is in the thick of things. One program that I am involved with is PSU's partnership with the Police Activities League [PAL] in sponsoring the National Youth Sports Program on campus every year. The program provides at-risk youngsters with a structured summer program which emphasizes sports, positive decision-making skills, and education. PSU does more than just provide the facilities—in keeping with its mission, university faculty consult with PAL in developing curriculum for the program and students are active participants in running the program. The collaboration doesn't just stop at the end of the summer. Throughout the year, PSU and PAL work together to involve these youngsters in positive programs and encourage them to work toward a college degree.

PSU has also tapped into emerging technologies to both strengthen the university and the community. One of the most innovative uses of technology is its PORTALS program, or the Portland Area Library System. PORTALS is a cooperative endeavor linking public and private institutions throughout the Portland area to an electronically accessible research library, with PSU as its hub. The States of Oregon and Washington both stand to benefit from the new resources available through this innovative project.

These programs are just the tip of the iceberg of the university's involvement. PSU runs teacher academies to help local teachers get in-service education. PSU students, who are all required to be involved in community projects, work at local community-based organizations such as community health centers, schools, and after-school programs.

It is thus no surprise that PSU has received a number of national awards for its innovative curriculum and for its work serving the metropolitan community and the State. Last year, the school received over $3 million from foundations and Federal agencies to support its cutting-edge undergraduate curriculum. For the same reason it is also has been recognized by the American Association of Higher Education, the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, and the Interstate Commission on Higher Education as a national model for innovative undergraduate education.

The 50th anniversary is a time to celebrate the achievements of the past and look forward to the innovations and adventures of the future. The faculty, staff, and students at Portland State University, past and present, deserve our congratulations on a remarkable history and our best wishes for future success.•

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, February 27, 1996, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.
